VOTER REAL RULER

Candidate Says Control Has Been Lost and Must Be Regained—Ollie James Informs Party's Choice

SEAGIRT, N. J.—Governor Wilson was notified this afternoon that he is the nominee of the Democratic party for the presidency of the United States. The ceremony was brief and simple. The crowd which witnessed it at the Wilson homestead was large. Ollie James of Kentucky, chairman of the notification committee, in a brief speech, informed Mr. Wilson that the Democrats had named him at the Baltimore convention. Governor Marshall of Indiana, the Democratic nominee for Vice-President, who came here on Tuesday for a long consultation with Mr. Wilson, was one of the guests of the New Jersey Governor, as was Governor Foss of Massachusetts. Governor Plaisted of Maine and Mann of Virginia were also present.

Governor Wilson, in his speech accepting the nomination, spoke of political and commercial conditions. He favored the most complete control of the trusts. He said that under present conditions combinations seemed to be inevitable. He said the nation must see to it that these organizations of capital did not control all business initiative and performance. He advocated careful readjustment and lowering of the tariff with a view of not disturbing business. He favored the building of a merchant marine saying the construction of the Panama canal demanded it. He advocated developing inland waterways. He said he fully realized the magnitude of the problems awaiting the Democratic party and himself.

The first large delegation of visitors to arrive came from Hoboken. A party of 300, headed by a brass band marched to the summer cottage. When Governor Wilson walked down the gravel drive he wore a new suit of gray. He shook hands with the Hoboken visitors.

It was estimated that more than 10,000 people had gathered near the Wilson home, by the time the notification ceremony began. Among the early arrivals were Governors Plaisted of Maine and Mann of Virginia and Representative Hughes of New Jersey.

The first campaign trip of Governor Wilson probably will be a tour of Maine. Governor Plaisted today invited the nominee to make such a trip.

Governor Wilson stood at the edge of his lawn and shook hands steadily for a quarter of an hour when he greeted 900 ward clubmen from Jersey City who invaded Seagirt with a band and marched in single file before the little white house.

In his speech of notification Mr. James said in part:

"The Democratic party believe that you possess in splendid fulness those great attributes of constructive genius, inventive intellect and resistless will that befit you for the great undertaking for which your party has commissioned you."

"The principles for which our party fought and for which we fell in the last campaigns have so aroused the public conscience that they have drawn to the support of the Democratic party practically all unselfish Americans and have divided into irreconcilable factions the hitherto victorious Republican party."

ELECTRIC WELDING TRAIN IN OPERATION NIGHT AND DAY ON RAIL RENEWAL OF "L" IN ROXBURY

FIRST STRIKERS ARE TAKEN BACK BY "L"

Following the decision of the state board of conciliation and arbitration, ruling that the strikers should be taken back at their old ratings, the first group of men who went out on June 7 went back today.

A statement was issued today by the Elevated to this effect: "In accordance with the understanding and in view of the decision of the state board of arbitration we shall immediately carry out its decision. We are arranging to take back the men in question at the rate of 200 a day beginning today if that number apply. If we can possibly do so we shall increase this rate with the hope that all men eligible and desiring to return may be back within a week."

Word was sent to the first 200 according to their seniority and a number returned to work.

In regard to the disposition of the men who were employed during the strike, Elevated officials said every effort would be made to find places for them and it was expected that as extra men are always employed in the summer months and that many of the men now at work were students who would be obliged to return to school or college at the end of this month anyway, there would probably be positions for nearly all.

James H. Vahey, counsel for the strikers, will call at the district attorney's office some time today to try to expedite the trial of the carmen accused of offenses. These men cannot go back to work until their cases are disposed of and men who may be convicted cannot return at all. The court comes in next week for the trial of jail cases, and it is probable the cases of the carmen which are not disposed of by the district attorney will be tried, so that before the period in which all the strikers are to be returned to work expires, the question of eligibility will be settled.

The decision that the men should return at their former ratings to their positions was reached by the state board of conciliation and arbitration Tuesday evening, and according to signed agreements, both the Elevated company and the union carmen are to abide by the result. The men discharged for "unsatisfactory service" between May 14 and June 7 are to be taken back with those who went on strike. Enthusiasm marked the announcement at all headquarters of the carmen and at the different divisions of the company.

Under the terms of the final agreement the Elevated company is to notify the union officers at the different divisions quarters the men they want to return to work. The men are requested to be on hand each day to await the call for duty. They will be taken back in order of their seniority of service. The men who wish to return must give notice to the company before Aug. 16. They are all to be reinstated by Aug. 19. "There is nothing for me to say," said Gen. William A. Bancroft, president of the Elevated, when asked his opinion of the findings.

LIGHTING MINOR NEED, SAYS MAYOR

That questions affecting improvements to institutions in the city are more urgent now than that of municipal ownership of street lighting, was the contention of Mayor Fitzgerald today prior to the hearing this afternoon on the contract for 11,000 lights for the city.

The contract has been held up for many months, the Rising Sun company, which holds it, having been given extensions from time to time.

SOLID LINES OF STEEL IN STREETS WHERE CAR TRACKS ARE RENEWED

Extensive track renewals with concrete base, steel ties, new nine-inch girder rails, and welded joints throughout have been started by the Boston Elevated and 600 men are working day and night in 11-hour shifts on Washington street in Dorchester and Washington, Dudley, Roxbury and Warren streets in Roxbury.

The latter group of streets in Roxbury includes the special work, curves and inclines in connection with the Dudley street terminal of the Elevated division. On Washington street in Dorchester, between Grove Hall and Codman square the work is advancing on the outward bound track, that one being laid as far as Columbia road, although the joints are not yet welded.

Washington street, Dorchester, is to be treated by the city with a concrete base and wooden block paving as soon as the Elevated track work is finished. The welding outfit is now on this section of the work and is running under the direction of F. C. Stockwell of the Loraine Welding Machine Company of Johnston, Pa., with two shifts of six men and a foreman day and night. The men have but recently come from contracts in Glasgow, Dublin and Liverpool, where they spent three years.

The outfit is made up of four short single track cars, the sand-blast, welding, dynamo and grinding cars. The rail is first stripped of all bolts, plates and dirt by Elevated employees. Then the blasting car moves along and dry sand is blown on the rail at the joint under pressure of 20-25 pounds and a welding bar is placed on each side of the rail.

The welding car with its dynamo in a separate car trailing after then moves up to the joint and the welder, suspended on a boom, is lowered into place and set on the rail with a hydraulic jack. As the metal is heated by electric current the pressure of the jack is slackened off and the weld made with loose contact.

When the metal assumes the proper heat, a pressure of 40 tons is maintained at the rail joint for 2½ minutes, to allow the rail to cool off with the aid of water-cooling contact blocks, thus preserving the elastic temper. The weld is made at three points, the center and both ends of the joint. The grinding car with its two grinding frames, one for each rail, now moves up and all uneven places are smoothed down.

The apparatus in the welding car consists of transformer tanks carrying 300 gallons of water for cooling, a five horsepower motor for operating the welder up and down and a 2½ horsepower motor for the sidewise motions. A 1½ horsepower motor is used for circulating the water.

The dynamo car holds a rotary converter, a regulator and switchboard for the operating current, which is taken from the trolley as direct and fed into the rotary, whence it goes as alternating current at a voltage of 300 amperes to the transformer in front of the welder. Here it is stepped up to a voltage of 27,000 amperes and cut back to a voltage of six to eight at the rail.

PANAMA LOBBYIST'S METHODS EXPOSED BY SENATOR WORKS

WASHINGTON—A protest against misrepresentation of the sentiment of the business men of California on the proposed prohibition of railroad-owned ships passing through the Panama canal, was made by Senator Works in the Senate today during the debate on the Panama canal bill.

A printed compilation of letters and telegrams, purporting to represent the views of 53 per cent of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, and protesting against the proposed prohibition was placed on the desks of all the Senators this morning by order of Senator Brandagee of Connecticut. This was the reason for the protest of the Senator from California.

Senator Brandagee questioned, admitted he had not been authorized to print the communications and circulate them, by the committee on interoceanic canals, of which he is a member, but said the letters had been compiled by Captain Barnes of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce.

"Captain Barnes is a representative of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and is working for their interests," said Senator Works. "These telegrams do not represent the sentiment of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, and many of them have been sent without authority."

The San Francisco Chamber and the Los Angeles Chamber are still in favor of the prohibition of railroad-owned ships from the canal. Commenting on the granting of free tolls to coastwise vessels, Senator Works said:

"The government has a perfect right to grant free tolls to American coastwise vessels. Should the Senate vote down the amendment granting free tolls, it would be a confession that the contention of Great Britain is right and then the United States would be in honor bound to comply with her demands."

"The United States should be as honest in its contracts with other nations as an individual would be in fulfilling his contracts. I am not in favor of rebating the tolls to American vessels, for rebating has become unpopular in this country and I should not like to see the United States embark upon it."

MISS WILSON IS OPPOSED TO TAKING OF MONTICELLO

WASHINGTON—Purchase of Monticello, Thomas Jefferson's home, congressional sanction for which is being earnestly advocated by Mrs. Martin W. Littleton, wife of the New York congressman, has interested Washington society women who devote their spare time to philanthropic or other public work.

Miss Flora Wilson, daughter of the secretary of the agriculture, a suffrage worker, took issue today with Mrs. Littleton and opposed the plan for the United States to confiscate the property of Representative Levy, who owns the place.

HALTS CONVENTION UNTIL PLATFORM IS FIXED TO SUIT HIM

Hiram W. Johnson, Governor of California, is Slated to Be the Nominee For Vice-President Though Names of Other Candidates Are Likely to Be Presented

REPORTS NEARLY ALL READY

Rules Committee Favor Dropping the Word "National" From Name of the New Party and Recommend the Title of Progressive For All States

CHICAGO—At 1:30 o'clock this afternoon Theodore Roosevelt's name was placed in nomination as the head of the ticket of the National Progressive party by William A. Prendergast, comptroller of the city of New York.

Colonel Roosevelt upset the plans of his leaders at the national Progressive party's convention this afternoon when he ordered the resolution committee to go back to work on the platform because the members had failed to get it into small enough compass to suit him.

As a result the convention was brought to a standstill early after it was called to order at 11:30 a. m., and there was nothing else to do but declare a recess.

At 1:20 o'clock Senator Beveridge again called the convention to order. The regular program was suspended, therefore, pending further editing of the platform which it was said in every instance followed the lines proposed by Colonel Roosevelt in his address of Tuesday.

It had been planned to have the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt as head of the ticket occur at noon, but the colonel's determination that the platform should suit him in every particular changed the whole course of procedure.

The United Press has released the nominating speech to be made by William A. Prendergast, comptroller of New York city, supposing that the program would be adhered to.

It was agreed by most of the delegates that the ticket should be Colonel Roosevelt for President and Gov. Hiram Johnson of California for Vice-President.

The first of the state delegations to arrive at the Coliseum was California. Headed by a band the delegates paraded around the hall. A few minutes later the New York and Illinois delegations arrived, and they also marched through the aisles headed by their bands and a banner labelled "Funk's hat."

PARK HEADS OF U. S. TO MEET IN BOSTON

Park superintendents from all over the United States are to gather in Boston, Aug. 12 to 17, to discuss questions relating to park supervision and the best means of making playgrounds attractive and to inspect the various parks in and around Boston. In conjunction with this gathering 1500 children of Dorchester will take part in sports, games and amusements on Franklin field, while athletic games will be played by Greater Boston youths.

Plans are being completed rapidly in the Dorchester district by Daniel O'Reilly, instructor of athletics at Dorchester high school, and teachers from the Gibson street, Savin Hill, Franklin, Neponset and Eustis street playgrounds. The children's games will be in charge of Mrs. Lulu Donovan.

livered the opening invocation when the convention was called to order at 11:30 by Chairman Beveridge.

The report of the committee on permanent organization was presented by Chairman Charles E. Scott of Alabama. It made the temporary organization permanent.

Thomas Woodruff of New York was recognized and declared that the Democrats were criticized for adopting the method of nominating before agreeing on the platform. Such a procedure, he said was unfair to the candidates. William Flinn of Pennsylvania objected to Mr. Woodruff's contentions declaring that most of the Pennsylvania delegates wanted to go home late today.

"Let us get through with the program and nominate now," he shouted. "We can get through with the oratory. We are hampered with rules. Let us throw them overboard."

When the convention again was called to order at 1:20 p. m. Modill McCormick for the rules committee read a compromise plank, naming the organization the "Progressive" party, but agreeing that where states adopted another name that action should be approved. The rule fixing the basis of representation at one delegate for each 10,000 votes was amended to one for each 5,000.

An amendment offered by Delegate Mitchell of Pennsylvania specifically recognizing the Washington party in Pennsylvania as the Pennsylvania adjunct of the party was accepted by Chairman McCormick and the rules were then adopted without division.

Mr. Allen of Kansas then moved to suspend the rules to permit the presentation of the nominating speeches and the motion was carried almost unanimously.

Alabama gave way to New York and Comptroller Prendergast of New York was recognized to nominate Colonel Roosevelt. It developed, however, that he was not present and the convention marked time while a messenger was sent scurrying to find the missing nominator. Mr. Prendergast was found at 1:30 p. m. and placed Colonel Roosevelt in nomination.

Jane Addams of Chicago, sociological worker, promised a new era political history. She will be the first woman to second a presidential nomination as the representative of Illinois. Henry J. Allen, the Kansas editor, also will make one of the principal seconding speeches.

To conclude nominations without a roll call was a unique possibility when the delegates met today. Colonel Roosevelt's nomination by acclamation would be followed, it was thought, by a viva voce vote choosing Governor Johnson as his running mate. The name of Judge Ben B. Lindsey will be presented for Colorado by Edward Costigan. Pearl Wright of Louisiana is Col. John M. Parker's champion.

An important question to be put be-

ROOSEVELT WINS KANSAS ELECTORS

TOPEKA, Kan.—Latest returns show that the Progressive primary victory of Tuesday has been even greater than at first reported. The eight Roosevelt electors were chosen by fully 35,000 majority. Congressman P. P. Campbell has apparently won renomination by a close margin.

Arthur Capper, publisher of the Topeka Capitol, defeated Frank Ryan of Leavenworth for the Republican nomination for Governor by 40,000, and George H. Hodges, Democratic candidate, won over his two opponents. The fight for United States senator between Governor Stubbs and Senator Curtis is close. Stubbs is leading. The Democrats' nominated H. P. Farrelly for United States senator.

THE MUSICAL AGE

Now, in this phonographic age,
No place is so remote,
If it is found on foot, by stage,
Or train, balloon or boat,
But that one hears, on reaching it,
Familiar voices and
Is welcomed—which means quite a "hit"— Perchance, by Sousa's band,
That, with a crash of horns and drums,
Plays: "See, the conquering hero comes!"

From hill and plain and mountain tall,
Likewise on sea and shore,
We hear Galski and Melba call,
Journet and Scotti roar.
Though o'er the hills and far away,
For quietude we flee,
McCormack follows us to say:
"I hear you calling me."
And wander round the world and back
Carnegie still is on our track.

No more are we alone for, oh!
It does not matter where
We go—a journeying we know
Our friends are in the air (Or in their air) about us and Must sing without surcease,
Or else they'll play to beat the band,
Some rousing march-time piece.
Each traveler takes—these days of song—
His own grand opera troupe along.

Take it one year with another a good many people patronize the street cars off and on, or perhaps it would be more proper to say, on and off.

APPEARANCES

'Twas one of those seafaring men
Who said: "I have an idy
That while the tide is out is when
The shore looks most un-tide-y."
And what he said, we feel, is so,
And it is just as true
That when a shoe's untied, we know
It looks un-tide-y, too.

With three interested parties adding fuel to the brisk fire under it, no one will doubt that the political pot will soon be boiling merrily.

MISNOMER

"What's in a name? But little, we'll agree,
Since "watered silk" is drygoods, don't you see?"

The reason for the high cost of meat is a difficult problem to solve, but if the restaurant porkchop is cut any thinner than it is now, every one ought to be able to see through it.

SUBSTANTIATED

"Did you ever hear the saying, 'A patient waiter is no loser'?"
"Yes, and there must be a lot of truth in it since in England the Prince of Wales sometimes waits years and years for a single crown and is finally satisfied with his reward."

No matter if some one of our presidential candidates shall, in our November election, get them all, still the votes from our widely distributed sea islands will have to be classed under the head of "scattering."

SPOKANE MEN BUY BURLINGTON MINE

SPOKANE, Wash.—By one of the largest mining deals of the season just completed, Ben F. Hervey has sold to a syndicate composed of B. S. Knudson, R. A. Hutchinson, A. M. Tate, W. C.
Morgan and D. C. Nicholson, 735,000 shares and the control of the Burlington Mining Company. It is stated that the sale was made on a basis of $250,000 for the Burlington property.
The new company will commence development work at once. New officers were elected for the company out of all the members of the syndicate, B. S. Knudson being president and W. C. Morgan secretary.

NEW BRIDGE TO COST $2,000,000

VANCOUVER, B. C.—The railway commission recently ordered that within 30 days after the approval of the plans by the engineer, work must start on the construction of the bridge over the Second Narrows to connect Vancouver with North Vancouver.

The Burrard Bridge and Tunnel Company, which has the backing of all the surrounding municipalities, is to erect the bridge which will probably cost $2, 000,000.

POINTS OF VIEW

They are men of sense, so we must allow,
Are the ones who dare advance
The view that the women would not know how
To vote if they had the chance,
And how could we show them what is right,
Should they come to us, my brother,
Since a half of us vote, in every fight,
One way, and a half the other?

It is really a sorry thing to think
That a half of our folks nourish
The political views designed to sink
This government which we cherish.
But if it is so, it may be high time
For the women to be voting,
That the ship of state, with her hopes sublime,
May keep on proudly floating.

Democrats generally are glad to note that Candidate Wilson and Colonel Bryan are working hand in hand, yet they hope the former will not follow too closely the latter's footsteps since they did not lead quite to the desired goal.

IN LONDON

The chauffeurs say—
And they should know—
Through Fleet street they Must all "go slow."

If no other nation is going to try to win the America's cup, how would it do to give it to some European country and then have the fun of winning it back again?

ON PAPER

A lawyer had ought to be brawny, because,
If all is quite true that they say,
Quite often he "works like a horse" when he draws
"Conveyances" day after day.

Automobilists are proving themselves to be good road inspectors. Every rut in the highway serves as a means for jogging their memory that it needs fixing.

OPPOSITES

It makes a difference—every wife
Is very much aware—
If a man's a lion in her life,
Or only just a bear.

System and concentration count for a great deal in the proper carrying on of affairs. The plan of having one city in each state wherein to transact the state's business is a "capital" idea.

WHAT'S IN A NAME

There are some names, we must agree,
That do not "fit" just to a T,
But its name looks, it seems to us,
Just like the hippopotamus.

Paradoxical as it may seem to sound,
it is said that District Attorney Whitman thinks the deeper he digs into New York's alleged $2,400,000 police graft
the more likely he is to get the men "higher up."

ORGANIZE A NEW REFORM SOCIETY

WASHINGTON—"Ich dien"—"I serve!"
will be the motto of a new organization of the public spirited men and women all over the country who are desirous of "serving the people" in forwarding reforms, according to plans announced by Mrs. Champ Clark, wife of the speaker.

Associated with Mrs. Clark are Thomas Nelson Page, Mrs. John Hays Hammond, Andrew Carnegie, Mr. and Mrs. Seth Low and others, whose individual efforts have heretofore been directed toward social service. The proposed association will concentrate their efforts.

CAP AND COLLAR MAY GO

WASHINGTON—American sailors may not wear the round cap and white rolling collar much longer. The naval board has about concluded that they interfere with the sailors' work. A round narrow brimmed cloth cap and regulation hannel shirt are preferred.
For traditions the old cap and collar may be preserved as a shore uniform.

UNIVERSITY ADDS CIVIC LIBRARY

MINNEAPOLIS—A new department is being added to the library of the University of Minnesota according to Dr.
William A. Schaper of the political science department, and when finished will include all documents available concerning all the cities in the country having more than 30,000 population. Dr.
Schaper said that the new department would give to the university the fullest reference library on municipal government in the country.

Many thousand volumes already have been collected. Dr. Schaper has been on a tour of the southern and western states in the interest of the collection, and said that the cities welcomed a depository for their documents. He said that cities of the country have been careless about their publications, and that some have been so generous that they have not a complete set themselves.

CITY'S DEBT DROPS NEARLY $400,000

A decrease of $391,625 in the city's gross funded debt during the last seven months and a drop of $398,367.75 in the net funded debt during that time are shown in City Auditor Mitchell's monthly report for July, just issued. The drop in the gross funded debt would have been almost twice as much had it not been that the city was obliged to assume a debt of $717,350 in taking over Hyde Park, Boston's twenty-sixth ward.
The gross funded debt on July 31 was $114,868,364.33, including the Hyde Park indebtedness, against $115,859,989.33 on Dec. 31, 1911. The net funded debt on July 31 was $72,435,596.96 against $72, 833,964.71 on Dec. 31.

Although several loans have been authorized during the year, the city's borrowing capacity within the debt limit is $1,317,105.28.

OHIO CONCERNS INCREASE CAPITAL

COLUMBUS, O.—Incorporation records of the secretary of state show that there has been authorized during the month of July the issuance of $25,173,100 of new capital by industrial, mercantile and commercial concerns of the state, of which $17,195,000 represents increases of capitalization of old companies and $7,978,100 authorized capital for new incorporations, an increase of $24,225,100 for the month as compared with the corresponding period last year.

ASSIGNED TO FRENCH ARMY

WASHINGTON—The French government has extended to the war department the privilege of naming three more American army officers for instruction and observation with the French army.
Capt. Frank Parker, twelfth cavalry, will go to the L'Ecole de Guerre, Capt.
Albert N. McClure, fourth cavalry, to the cavalry school at Saumur, and Capt.
Oliver Edwards, fifth infantry, to the French infantry school.

OHIO MEN WANT PURE FABRIC LAW

CINCINNATI—When Cincinnati delegates to the annual convention of the Laundrymen's National Association at Detroit on Aug. 19 journey to that city they will be prepared to push through a resolution calling for the enactment of a pure fabric law.

They say that Germany has such a law and it works well. The law they will ask Congress to pass will embody all of the good features of the German law.

The argument is that people buy goods, which, for instance, is said to be silk, when it is not pure silk. The goods wear out quickly and the laundry is blamed. The plan is to have a law passed compelling the maker to stamp goods plainly, telling just what they are made of.

Sir Henry Knight, formerly lord mayor

Sir Henry and Mr. Shuman are old

SEVEN-YEAR TERM OF CIVIL SERVICE IS LIKELY, SAY LEADERS

Change in Policy as Means of Defeating Pension Campaign Expected by Employees and Politicians

HOPE LIES IN VETO

WASHINGTON—Congress, it is said by political leaders, is on the eve of making a radical change in its civil service policy. At first few took seriously the proposition that provided for limiting the tenure to seven years, but now the proposition is stoutly supported.
Many civil service employees in this city look for it to be adopted and say that their only hope is that President Taft veto it.

The proposition is embodied in the executive, legislative and judicial appropriation bill, and is to the effect that the 31,000 civil service employees of the District of Columbia are to come up for reexamination and reappointment once in seven years, and that their tenure is no longer permanent, as at present.

The leaders in both houses of Congress are in favor of the provision. If the provision should be adopted for the District of Columbia, and be found to work well, it will be extended to the country as a whole.

Congress, in the seven-year tenure, is making its reply to the campaign which civil service employees of this city have been conducting for many years in favor of civil pensions. The clerks organized in a systematic way, and engaged former Senator Charles Dick of Ohio as their legal representative. He has been at work on this case since he retired from public life. Members of Congress have dialiked the continued pressure which was being brought to bear upon them in favor of civil pensions, and now they have come back with a reply in the form of the seven-year tenure, which, if adopted, would make a civil pension unnecessary.

The theory of the seven-year tenure is that once in seven years every civil service employee in this city is to sever his connection with the government and undergo an examination prior to reappointment. If his record has been good and if he passes the examination there will be no reason why he should not be reappointed. In this way, say the advocates of the seven-year tenure, it will be possible for the government to increase the efficiency of its working forces in this city.

The friends of the government clerks say that the seven-year tenure points to a return to the old-time spoils system in politics, but the rejoinder is made that this cannot be the case, as all appointments are to be made, as in the past, by the civil service commission, from the regular list of available who have taken the examinations in the regular way.

Congress thus has two objects in favor of the seven-year tenure: First, it does not want to adopt a civil pension for the United States; and second, it believes that the proposed new system will weed out of the service a great many people who are incompetent.

The 31,000 civil service employees of the government in this city represent about 150,000 of the population, or within 30,000 to 75,000 of the total white population of the entire District of Columbia.

GIVES NEW BOOKS TO LAW SCHOOL

Charles W. Bartlett, the Boston lawyer, is now in Europe, but before leaving Boston had arranged an agreeable surprise for the Suffolk school of law,
of which he is a trustee.

He learned from Dean Archer of the school that the school library was to be enlarged during the summer. He thereupon filed with a publishing house an order to deliver on a date specified a new set of state reports to the library.
The reports have just been delivered and installed.

STADIUM PLANS FOR SAN DIEGO HIGH SCHOOL IN

SAN DIEGO, Cal.—Of the four plans recently submitted by architects for the construction of the proposed stadium in the rear of the high school buildings, Edwin T. Banning's plans probably were the most elaborate. The structure he designed would seat, according to the Union, as many as 30,000 and would have a high superstructure. Theodore Kistner also submitted similar plans, although treating them in a considerably different manner. Kistner in the past has submitted sketches of school buildings and the polytechnic structures which have been accepted.

Quayle Brothers & Cressey included an open-air theater at the entrance to the stadium. The theater will seat 5000 while the stadium will accommodate 46,000. On their sketches the stadium itself will be 630 feet in length and 333 feet in width. A baseball park and football field, entirely separate, are included, as well as a track four laps to the mile,
for automobiles and motorcycles, with a quarter-mile running track, 330 feet of which is straightaway. The exterior of the structure would be 1000 by 530 feet.

YACHTS ASSEMBLING IN GLEN COVE FOR BY N. Y. Y. C. CRUISE

Commodore C. Ledyard on the Flagship Diana Will Officially Open Event at Colors This Evening

RACING TOMORROW

GLEN COVE, L. I.—Yachts streamed into the wooded haven of Hempstead bay today like great white birds into a dark green hive, for the rendezvous of the New York Yacht Club at sunset. The actual sailing will start tomorrow with Newport as the ultimate destination and Vineyard Haven as the most easterly point.

The fleet today numbered a score of well-known fliers and steam yachts, and when the gun booms for evening colors tonight from the flagship Diana, it is expected that Commodore C. Ledyard Blair will be in command of one of the largest squadrons that has been assembled under the red cross burgee of the club in many years.

The fleet began to assemble on Monday, and yesterday a dozen boats came in from the eastward, including the new knockabout Boston sloop Dorelli II, owned by G. L. Batcher, the Dorelli will sail her maiden race tomorrow in the first run of the cruise to Smithtown bay.

Many of the larger yachts did not appear until afternoon and some of them slipped off the ways at the ship yards at City Island just in time to join the fleet. Under the rules of the cruise no yacht can haul out for cleaning after the racing begins. Some of the boats found difficulty early today in finding Glen Cove, on account of the fog, but later a light breeze and a warm sun cleared the air. The flagship Diana came down from New York during the day and signals were hoisted for a captain's meeting at 7 p. m., when it was expected that minor plans regarding the cruise would be discussed and an agreement reached as to the time of starting the first run of the cruise tomorrow.

Commodore Blair commands the squadron for the second year, with Franklin A. Plummer as fleet captain and executive officer. The cruise this year will cover 223 miles along the northern shore of Long Island and the southern New England coast. There will be five racing runs with a total of 192 miles, while the ports of call after leaving Glen Cove will be Smithtown Bay, New London, Newport, Vineyard Haven and back to Newport. The longest run, 54 miles, will be on Friday from Smithtown to New London, while the shortest will be that of tomorrow from Glen Cove to Smithtown, 24 miles. As an early anchorage is expected at Smithtown it is planned to hold the rowing races for the strong-armed sailors of the fleet off the flagship Diana late in the afternoon. These races are for the Owl and Gamecock colors for dinghies and gigs, with substantial purses for the oarsmen.

The call at Smithtown is the first in many years and is in keeping with the policy of Commodore C. Ledyard Blair in taking the fleet off the beaten track at least once in the cruise. Last year Commodore Blair led the squadron into Pt. Pond bay on the north side of Montauk Point.

Upon the return to Newport, many of the fastest yachts will get out their racing gear for the Astor and King's cup events. Club topsails are barred during the cruising runs. The Diana will be almost as rich in treasure as a Spanish galleon for there are gold and silver prizes for each run and for all classes stowed away in the trophy locker.

Commodore Blair contributes the two cups for schooners and two for sloops for the Smithtown-New London run; Vice-Commodore Dallas M. Pratt similar prize cups for schooners and sloops for the run from Vineyard Haven to Newport; Rear Commodore George F. Baker, Jr., cups for the New London-Newport run; the Alumni Association of the United States navy, cups for the Smithtown-New London run, while the navy challenge cups will be for the Glenn Cove-Smithtown race.

BOSTON GETS NEW PITCHER When the Boston Nationals appear on the South End grounds today, Pitcher Silzer, a Long Island boy, is expected to appear in uniform, having been signed by President Gaffney for the Boston team.

BAY STATE AND RHODE ISLAND IN SECOND CONTEST

Cheroot Wins First of the 18-Foot Interstate Yacht Races With Arrow in Second Place

MARBLEHEAD, Mass.—With the three yachts representing Massachusetts in the interstate 18-foot championship races with Rhode Island leading by 2167 points to 1333 as a result of the first race in the series Tuesday, interest in these contests was very keen this morning when the second of the races started off here.

Conditions were very unsteady Tuesday, but the skippers of the three Massachusetts boats, Cheroot, Louise and Moslem II, showed that under light weather they had better boats. Cheroot, owned by R. S. Hendrie, got the start, with the Rhode Island boat, Arrow, following closely. What wind there was from the north, necessitating a beat out of the harbor.

All the boats went over on the starboard tack, but the Cheroot and Arrow, as soon as Marblehead Point could be cleared, went over on the other tack, the rest of the boats well bunched, standing over toward Cat Island.

The wind then died down, but in another minute it shifted from north to south, putting the Cheroot and Arrow to weather by a mile and leaving the Louise, Moslem II, Dorothy and Hugi way off the course. There was nothing to it but the Cheroot and Arrow from that time on, the Cheroot leading at the outer mark, after a beat due south for four miles, by three minutes. In the run back to the guide buoy off Marblehead Rock the Arrow picked up a bit, passing the Cheroot two minutes behind and then across the finish line in 58th astern.

The two other Massachusetts boats had a line fight among themselves for the honor of third position. Up to 300 yards from the finish the Moslem led, but in getting in the spinnaker, the spinnaker boom took a dive into the water alongside, followed by the fabric.

The delay necessary in coming into the wind and getting things aboard gave the Louise a chance to draw in ahead, winning third place by 6 seconds.

The Hugi, the heavy-weather boat from Rhode Island, loafed badly in the light air at the start of the race and could not pick up enough later to put her in the running. The summary:

One hundred and five boats took part in the Boston Yacht Club open regatta, a record for several years for the club. The afternoon was perfect for the race, the breeze just enough for good sport, the tender number of the little fellows for the year. The Harpoon won in this class by a good margin.

PLAN RECEPTION FOR ATHLETES

NEW YORK—Mayor Gaynor has appointed an honorary reception committee of 105 prominent citizens to lead in the welcome to the victorious American Olympic athletes on Aug. 24.

The mayor himself expects to review the parade of troops, both federal and state, and large delegations representing New York athletic clubs as well as organizations from out of town.

A dinner served for 2000 persons will be the evening feature. President Taft, Governor Woodrow Wilson and Governor Dix have been invited.

ON THE GLIDDEN ROUTE

BARDSTOWN, Ky.—Splendid roads known as the Bardstown pike proved a fine 40½-mile run for the Glidden pathfinders in their Flanders electric. Owing to Louisville being a night stop on the tour in October it was necessary to devote a half day to closing hotel and garage arrangements and the start was not made from there until 2 o'clock. From Bardstown the tourists go to Mammoth cave, this being made a trip of 20 miles, and the next day they go to Nashville, through Bowling Green, then night stop between Louisville and Nashville. The total mileage on the tour route is 482 or about one third of the total. This distance has been covered in five days of fine traveling.

M'LOUGHLIN AND T. C. BUNDY DEFEAT NATIONAL PAIR

Pacific Coast Challengers Win in Straight Sets From R. D. Little and G. F. Touchard

NEW YORK—Followers of lawn tennis are today predicting that there will be a new championship doubles team this year when M. E. McLoughlin and T. C. Bundy, the Pacific coast stars, meet G. F. Touchard and R. D. Little, the national champions, at Newport in the challenge round, following the victory secured by the former over the latter in the state championship tournament on the Crescent Athletic Club, Tuesday.

It was the first time these teams had ever faced each other and a large throng witnessed the match, which proved to be rather easy for the westerners as they won in straight sets, 6-3, 6-3. The playing of all four contestants was very good and it was a fast match from beginning to end.

All of the other matches were fairly close, with the exception of the defeat of C. M. Bull, Jr., and H. C. Martin, the winners of the western championship last year, who were defeated by W. M. Washburn and L. E. Mahan at 6-0, 6-2. K. H. Behr and F. C. Imman had a lively match against F. C. Bagges and S. H. Voshell where they won at 6-3, 10-8. Behr piled up a great number of net shots in this match and was the unsteady member on his side. Imman's best work was his lengthy drives and his skill at passing. The summary:

Second round
R. Palmer and Dr. William Rosenbaum defeated G. S. Groesbeck and M. Hamilton, 1-6, 8-6, 10-8; K. H. Behr and F. C. Imman defeated J. C. Tomlinson Jr. and A. S. Craig, 6-3, 10-8.

Third round
K. H. Behr and F. C. Imman defeated F. C. Bagges and S. H. Voshell, 6-3, 10-8; W. M. Washburn and L. E. Mahan defeated C. M. Bull, Jr., and H. C. Martin, 6-0, 6-2; H. A. Man Jr. and L. D. Woodbury defeated Dr. Ewing Taylor and Dr. Alfred Stillman, 6-3, 10-8; H. A. Man Jr. and L. D. Woodbury defeated Dr. Ewing Taylor and Dr. Alfred Stillman, 6-3, 10-8.

One more for Pittsburgh over New York.

It was the Chicago Nationals second defeat of the present eastern trip.

One more for Pitcher Bender. It looks as if he was again back in form.

Manager Mack tried a shift in his lineup yesterday and won.

The Red Sox get back their 6-game margin yesterday as Washington lost to Chicago.

Carl Lundgren, the former Chicago National pitcher, is now with the Hartford team of the Connecticut League.

It is an interesting fact that almost every time the Boston Nationals win, the Boston Americans lose.

It was a great catch by Mitchell of Cincinnati in the ninth inning and undoubtedly saved the game for his team.

Pitcher Noyes of the Spokane club is expected to join the Boston Nationals at the end of his season on the Pacific coast. He has been doing some fine pitching of late and is expected to develop into a good major league player. He is a junior at the University of Chicago.

UNITED STATES NOT EXPECTED TO SEND TEAM

President Wrenn of Tennis Association Unable to Get Men to Try for Davis Trophy This Year

NEW YORK—While final action will not be taken until the week of the national tournament at Newport, it is practically settled that the United States will not take part in any international match with Australia for the Dwight F. Davis tennis trophy this year.

Robert D. Wrenn, president of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association, has been diligently searching for players of the top class who could make the team during the past week or two. He has been in the Crescent Athletic Club at Bay Ridge during the New York State championship now in progress, discussing the matter with M. E. McLoughlin, T. C. Bundy, R. D. Little, K. H. Behr and others.

His efforts to secure positive assurances of the leading players to represent this country has principally been due to the fact that the English Lawn Tennis Association, following the victory in the preliminary ties against France, has definitely decided to play the Americans, if at all, in Australia. This means that there will be no international matches of any character whatsoever in this country this year. Furthermore, it means that the Americans, if they wish to play for the world-famous trophy, must journey to Australia to play the English team to decide which will become the challengers of the Australasian holders of the cup. None of the leading American players can spare the time to go to Australia.

RETURN RACE STARTS TODAY

J. G. THORPE WILL COMPETE IN THE ELKS' CARNIVAL

Same System as Was Used at Stockholm Including the Recall Flag Will Be Tried Out

The Olympic athletes who are to compete in the list of events planned for their reception at Fenway park Saturday afternoon under the auspices of Boston Lodge of Elks will introduce to the lovers of athletics in America the system that made the recent game at Stockholm such a tremendous success. In the first place all the events that make up the program will be arranged as at the Stockholm games, while in the sprints there will be used for the first time in this country the "recall flag," an innovation making it practically impossible for a runner to "beat the gun."

Instead of measuring by yards the metric system will be used so that a spectator can form a very definite idea of what the real Olympic games look like. Add to this the fact that every member of the American team that has returned will be on hand to compete and the resemblance to the Stockholm spectacle is enhanced.

J. G. Thorpe, the wonderful Indian athlete, is among the entries and he will compete in the decathlon and pentathlon contests, consisting of 10 and five events, respectively. Thorpe is now on the ocean bound for Boston and is expected to reach here Thursday or Friday. With him will come some of the others who are entered.

In addition to the Olympic team there will be many athletes entered in the various numbers and the indications are that there will be at least 150 of the best track and field performers entered. Entries close this evening with Hugh McGrath, 43 Tremont street.

BASEBALL TOMORROW AT 3:15 CINCINNATI NATIONAL LEAGUE

NEW YORK—David Fultz, a lawyer, formerly a star outfielder with the New York Americans and the Philadelphia Athletics, admitted Tuesday night that the rumors of activities toward forming a union of big league baseball players were true. Fultz, who is leading in the organization, admitted that members of the National League clubs met in his offices last Sunday and that American league players met secretly in New York two weeks earlier. All 16 clubs of the two major leagues were represented.

"There is nothing of a trade union nature about this," said Fultz. "The players are simply binding themselves to an organization to which they can look as a sort of protective association in case they have grievances with the men who conduct the big league affairs. Under no circumstances will the organization be affiliated with the Federation of Labor."

CAPTAIN SNOWDEN OF YALE VARSITY EIGHT NAMES HIS COACHES

Same System as Prevailed This Year Will Be Tried Again Next Season at New Haven

R. J. COOK NOT NAMED

That the Yale crews authorities are going to give the innovation tried in coaching this year another trial next season has been definitely settled by the naming of J. O. Rodgers '08, as head coach again with W. A. Harriman, coach of the Yale 1912 freshman eight, as his assistant.

This selection has been made by Capt. C. N. Snowden and in addition to these coaches he has named the following former Yale oarsmen as a graduate committee to help: F. W. Allen, '08; Alfred Cowles, '06; Payne Whitney, '08; A. S. Blagden, '01; J. C. Greenleaf, '09 and Radcliffe Romeyn, '12.

While the season of 1912 was not satisfactory to Yale men, it is felt that a beginning was made toward putting Yale rowing on the footing it used to enjoy in the days when R. J. Cook had full charge of the oarsmen, and before a professional coach was engaged. It is realized that more than one year is required to correct some of the faults which have cropped into Yale rowing during the past five or six years and Captain Snowden feels confident that the coaches and committee named are perfectly able to bring about the desired improvements.

It is expected that Coach Harriman will play a much more active part in developing the varsity eight next season than he did during the past one. Most of his attention was given to the freshman eight and the good showing made by that crew in the race with Harvard has brought forward materially in the eyes of Yale rowing followers.

He is a firm believer in the English rowing system and derived many valuable points from his trip abroad to watch the training of the Oxford and Cambridge University eights last winter. He made much use of these points in developing the Yale freshmen and will undoubtedly make them features of the varsity training next winter.

Much of the time during the past year had to be used in correcting faults learned by the oarsmen under the old system. In addition to this they had to learn a system that was entirely new to every candidate and it is hardly to be wondered at that they did not become perfect Yale oarsmen the first year. As the men who will be available next fall will all have had a year of coaching under the Rodgers methods, they will be able to give more attention to perfecting themselves and less to forgetting points learned under Coach Kennedy.

While Mr. Cook has not been named as a coach or member of the graduate committee, it is expected that he will make a good many visits to New Haven and Gales Ferry and lend his aid in every way possible. That a great improvement will have to be made if Yale is successfully to cope with Harvard on the water is admitted by all followers of the Blue, as the Crimson oarsmen are now working under a very successful system handled by a coach who has shown marked ability in turning out exceptionally fast and powerful eights.

Governor Johnson Favorite for Second Place

fore the delegates today by the rules committee was that of christening the new party.

The committee unanimously recommended "Progressive," dropping the word "National" from the title. Colonel Carrington of Maryland led the contest for the single nomenclature because of a Maryland law limiting party names on ballots to one word.

The rules committee recommended that every congressional district have at least one delegate, even if it has less than the required 10,000 votes. The rules committee also recommended that Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia be entitled to one delegate each with the privilege of voting and have one national committeeman each, the latter without a vote. To deny convention representation to the Philippines and Porto Rico was also recommended. That newly elected national committeemen and not the holdover members have charge of conventions was another recommendation.

Jane Addams Insistent

Jane Addams provoked an all night contest among the platform framers over the negro question. She stoutly insisted upon a plank explaining the Progressive attitude toward the negro, declaring for white leadership in the South, but promising negroes political equality and a fraternal welcome to the ranks of the new party. Colonel Roosevelt's close friends on the committee, led by Gifford Pinchot, opposed any radical declaration upon the question, declaring Colonel Roosevelt has clearly declared for white supremacy. Colonel Roosevelt and Miss Addams, it is said, held a long conference late last night over her proposed plank. She refused to withdraw it from the platform committee.

William Allen White of Kansas, led a contest for a plank declaring for legislation to prohibit shipment of liquor from wet to dry states. G. L. Record of New Jersey, led the opposition to any deliberation upon the question. He insisted the temperance question should not be raised, with the wealth of other issues outlined by the Roosevelt's "confession of faith."

Known opposition of Colonel Roosevelt to the injection of the liquor problem into the campaign was an important factor in the committee's discussion. Prohibitionists stole a march on the Progressives by having the liquor plank championed by a member of the national committee of the Prohibition party. Matthew E. O'Brien, of Connecticut, Mr. O'Brien got a hearing and offered a plank to the committee before his political identity was discovered.

The platform committee finally decided not to insert any plank in the platform on the liquor question. It was determined to leave all liquor questions to local governments. It was understood that the committee was united in its decision on this point and that none of its members would bring the subject up on the convention floor.

Immediately after the adjournment of the convention late today the leaders will begin a series of conferences to decide plans for the Progressive campaign. It was said that United States Senator Joseph M. Dixon of Montana would head the national committee and that Oscar S. Straus of New York would be named treasurer. Also it was announced that both Colonel Roosevelt and Governor Johnson would take the stump and travel in all sections of the country.

Colonel Roosevelt will meet the members of the new national committee at 10 a. m. Thursday. Then it will be decided where to locate the national Progressive headquarters. Other important matters will be settled at this conference.

Mr. Prendergast in his nomination speech will say:

"The platform you have adopted today says to the American people: We recognize the social and industrial issues of the time. We present remedies for them. You cannot expect relief from both parties. My candidate is more than a citizen; he is a national asset."

"In this momentous period of political doubt there is no man who presents such credentials as his. His candidacy has been successfully written on every page of his official career."

"He represents the most striking and eventful career in American history. He is one whose originality of thought and directness of action have made him a unique figure in American history—none other has rendered such distinguished public service. This man has touched every duty with conscientious service and established a reputation that has challenged the apathy of the public."

"He is one of the original progressives of the nation. His devotion to its interests has made a complete and generous contribution."

"To such a leader the hearts of millions of Americans turn in this national crisis, such a leader they ask you to give them in this hour of their hope. As the crusaders of old pledged themselves to God and country, so do we consecrate our lives to the service of that enduring democracy, ordained by the divine power, and as the leader in this crusade I present to you the name of America's greatest statesman and lion-hearted citizen—Theodore Roosevelt."

VOTE TO DROP WORD "NATIONAL" FROM PROGRESSIVE NAME

CHICAGO—Through W. N. Osgood of Lowell, Mass., as a representative of the Bay state, comes the proposition to change the name of the National Progressive party to the Progressive party and that recommendation will be favorably reported to the convention today by the national rules committee. At the meeting of the rules committee Tuesday night, Mr. Osgood in behalf of the Massachusetts delegation, recommended dropping the word "national" from the new party's name. The committee voted unanimously to favor this change in its report to the convention.

This step grew out of an incident. The Massachusetts delegation, 51 strong, was entertained at dinner by Roger Sherman at the Illinois Athletic Club. Other guests were Judge Enoch Foster of Maine, Gen. D. C. Remick of New Hampshire, B. Sumner and Charles H. Thompson of Vermont and former Governor Garvin of Rhode Island. As a forty-fourth anniversary gift the delegation gave to Mr. Sherman a silver cup bearing an inscription worded by Jeremiah J. McCarthy, "Presented to Roger Sherman by the Progressive delegates from Massachusetts, Chicago, Aug. 6, 1912."

When Mr. Osgood reported to the rules committee meeting later, he related the dinner incident and said the word "national" had been purposely omitted in the inscription to give the party wider scope. He recommended that the national party drop the word "national."

The vote followed without argument. During the dinner Mr. Roosevelt telephoned to the delegation he wanted to see them, so the entire party marched to the Congress hotel and, led by the women delegates at Mrs. Roosevelt's request, all met him and exchanged greetings.

The speakers at the dinner were Delegates Morrill, Hale, Thompson, Darnen, Mrs. Grace A. Johnson and former Governor Garvin. Jeremiah J. McCarthy was toastmaster and Colonel Dougherty presented the cup.

As instructed at the Faneuil hall meeting before they left the entire delegation is for Governor Johnson of California for Vice-President. The New England delegates met on Tuesday morning and appointed their chairmen as follows: Morrill, Hale, Thompson, Darnen, Remick of New Hampshire, Sumner of Vermont, Foster of Maine, Garvin of Rhode Island, Morrill of Massachusetts, Messrs. McCarthy and Morrill of Massachusetts and Foster of Maine were named a committee to wait on Senator Dixon and represent New England's views on the vice-presidency.

During the applause for Mr. Roosevelt preceding his speech all of the Massachusetts women were lifted to the platform to shake hands with him, Mrs. R. W. Child, Mrs. Towne, Mrs. Grace A. Johnson, Miss Alice Carpenter, Miss Helen Temple Cooke and Miss Mabel Cooke were enthusiastically received by the speaker and crowd.

The delegates expect to leave for home tonight.

STATE DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE TO ACT ON PROPOSED SLATE

It is said that another attempt will be made at this meeting to have the committee endorse Governor Foss for a third term with a view to assisting him in his contest with District Attorney Pelletier for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

The state ticket slate as prepared omits a candidate for Governor, the subcommittee declining to make a choice between the two candidates for Governor. The choice of candidates for the other five positions follows: Lieutenant Governor, David I. Walsh of Fitchburg; secretary of state, Frank J. Donahue of Boston; treasurer, Joseph L. "NO FUSION" WINS IN PENNSYLVANIA

CHICAGO—Colonel Roosevelt's opposition to fusion with the Taft supporters on the electoral ticket in Pennsylvania has won the day. The colonel and his Pennsylvania advisers had some animated debate about it for a time.

Messrs. Flinn and Van Valkenburg believed in the fusion idea; they would have put on the ticket the entire list of Roosevelt and Taft electors nominated several weeks ago, printing the entire list once under that of Roosevelt, and agreeing that the man who, at the head of the ticket, got the most votes should have the solid support of the entire electoral delegation.

To this Colonel Roosevelt objected, and now the action of the supreme court in the Kansas electoral case has won the day for Roosevelt. The supreme court postponed final decision in the Kansas matter till October.

PLATFORM FOLLOWS LINES LAID DOWN IN ADDRESS OF LEADER

CHICAGO—Members of the committee on resolutions of the national Progressive party said today that the platform would be ready for presentation to the convention this afternoon. The committee held a session Tuesday night following the report from the sub-committee which worked all day fixing up various planks to meet the wishes of Colonel Roosevelt as the first presidential standard bearer of the new party.

The sub-committee, it was said, worked hard to curtail the platform and to make the declaration of principles a model for brevity. There were so many subjects to be dealt with, however, and so much ground to be covered, that the task was found a most difficult one.

From this report all argumentation was eliminated. The report declares for many things, but it argues for none of them.

It is divided into five main parts: First, the part devoted to political reform, that is, the initiative and referendum and recall, the easy amendment of the federal constitution, the control of the courts, the corrupt practices act; second, industrial reform, that is, reform in the matter of labor laws, laws concerning hours of service, wages, shop conditions, workmen's compensation, social insurance pensions and child labor; third, business, the control of the railways and the trusts and the currency; fourth, conservation, in which come waterways, good roads, Alaska, the Panama canal and kindred subjects; and fifth, the tariff. A few minor points are touched upon, but most of the subjects in the platform fall into these five groups.

By special invitation of the sub-committee Herbert Knox Smith, late commissioner of corporations, and Charles McCarthy of Wisconsin sat with the committee. The plank on social and industrial reform was compiled by Judge Lindsey, Raymond Robbins and Paul Kellogg of the survey and it was substituted for the plank drawn by the provisional committee.

It is drafted closely following the radical lines laid down in Colonel Roosevelt's speech Tuesday.

PLAYHOUSE NEWS

COBURNS PLAY "MACBETH"

Speed, one of the striking qualities of Shakespeare's dramas, almost totally disappears in the usual stage performance, with its interminable waits for scene shifting. The Coburn players, with their greenwood platform avoid all this. Once the performance of "Macbeth" began last night in the Sever quadrangle it pressed forward with ever increasing momentum to the huddling climax. The effect was the thrilling, breath-taking quality Shakespeare aimed at.

Mr. Coburn played the ambitious Thane with power and dignity, affecting little subtlety of introspection in his scenes of remorse. This Macbeth was simple, straightforward, and so was the Lady Macbeth of Mrs. Coburn. She showed Lady Macbeth a whole-hearted partner in her husband's evil doing, and seemed to be as much ambitious for her own sake as his.

This view of the character is a good middle ground, not so appealing or so feminine as Miss Marlowe's Lady Macbeth, who wished all the power for her husband, but fully as dramatic, and much more stirring. Is it not better, too, than the tragedy queen of tradition, to whom Macbeth was but a worm under the feet of his fierce wife, always causing a slip in her plans.

Together they strove to rise, each impelled by selfish interests, together they fell, and they clung to each other as they fell.

The impersonators of the witches deserve special praise, and Roydon Elyne's porter was admirable. This fine actor lends distinction to every part he takes. This afternoon the bill is "As You Like It," this evening, "Twelfth Night."

BRIEF TROLLEY AND WATER TRIPS OFFERED FOR SMALL EXPENDITURE

Famous Cliff Walk at Nahant Presents Rare Shore and Ocean Views and Is Pleasantly Reached

ROUTES ARE VARIED

Boston offers so many attractive trips by trolley and boat that require few hours and little expenditure that none in this vicinity need go without such outings for want of desirable places to visit. Some of the best of such routes are being described in the Monitor, and the fifth article in the series appears herewith.

AS PICTURESQUE as anything that can be found on the New England coast is the cliff walk at Nahant. Not everybody who goes to Nahant knows about the cliff walk. Most persons taking the trip leave the boat at Bass Point, where are the scenic railways, popcorn booths and similar things dear to him who is out for what he calls a good time.

Let him who likes beauty and is fond of the sea start out some day for the cliff walk. By taking a little different route from the one to which he has been accustomed, and by putting himself in the attitude of a globe trotter, he can have an experience that is in most respects new, and worthy of a longer distance to reach and more difficulty in accomplishing, should that be necessary.

The common starting point is the boat that leaves Boston for Nahant and Bass Point several times daily, but the ride to the wharf by trolley or elevated should be considered a part of the day's outing and not as a mere means of getting there. The streets through which the car passes, the people, the incidents, will be fraught with interest for those who have learned or are learning to travel. To get the full benefit of the trip a whole day should be given to it if possible, but it can be done well by taking the boat that leaves Boston at 3:30 p. m. If it is not wished to include the cliff walk any of the later boats can be taken, the 5:10, 6:15 or 8 o'clock. The boat itself is an object of interest. Instead of being a big excursion boat it is best described as a pleasure steamer. Its decks are so near the water that the trip is distinct for this reason alone from the other trips in the harbor.

It is different from the Nantasket

Pulpit rock, feature of cliff walk on eastern point of Nahant

Surf on the rocks bordering the noted cliff walk at Nahant trip as it well can be. It is not strictly a harbor trip. The boat makes at once for the open sea. The delights of this trip can scarcely ever be exhausted. It is wonderful in color. The colors change with every day in the year and every hour of the day. When the day is fair, but the air is moist, they are opalescent, the blue of the sky and the blue of the sea catching the rainbow colors of the light and shimmering them back in myriad ways. The white and gray of the sails, the yellow and red of the buoys, and the white, green, brown and black of the steamers and other boats that are met or passed on the way against the blue background of sky and sea, and reflected from the water, are a delight that can be given by no masterpiece in a gallery of paintings, on this side of the great ocean or the other.

If the day is breezy, stirring the waves to froth and dashing them against the rocks, so much the better for the effect of the New England coast, and the sense of a trip at sea, but the thing to do with this trip is to take it when the opportunity comes, not waiting for particular conditions, for it is always worth while.

The first stop of the boat is made at Nahant. If there is a stranger on board he is likely to ask what there is at Nahant, and the answer usually is "Nothing," but if there is time let him who loves the sea not fail to get off at the primitive little landing that looks not unlike a railroad junction in some out-of-the-way place in the country. As in such places, it is not improbable that a well-dressed man or woman will leave the boat and make his way to a shining automobile or a spanking team of horses which will bear him away. The globe-trotter, leaving the boat more leisurely, has time to observe the farmer in his overalls, the young girls from town who have come down to see the boat come in, and the welcome of some native to the visitor from afar, then he makes his way with the others up the little park to the street where the car tracks are and where the Lynn and Nahant railway terminates. There he turns to his right and of the first person he meets he asks the nearest way to the cliff walk. At least, that is the best way to find it. On his way he passes beautiful summer residences with glorious views of the sea, for Nahant is on a peninsula and is said to be one of the oldest of eastern summer resorts. After 10 or 15 minutes of such walking he comes to the object of his journey, the cliff walk.

Nahant is built upon rock, and its shores are a mass of ragged, jagged, rocks—red, gray, green, lichen covered. The walk borders large estates running down to the water's edge, whose owners, like the day visitors, are lovers of nature's grandeur and beauty. It is a carefully made pathway among the rocks. In some places it seems to be chiseled through, in others the loose rocks have been made firm in their places by cement. Sometimes several steps have been formed, and chasms have been bridged. Never has the original wildness been disturbed. The hand of man has smoothed the way but not spoiled it. This walk is free to whoever cares to take it, provided he does not wander away from the path to intrude upon the privacy of the homes, that he does not break or pick things, or fish, or bathe, or picnic there. So far the request seems to have been carefully observed.

The character of the walk is indicated by the names given to certain parts of it, Cave of the Winds, Spouting Horn, the Pulpit, the Arm Chair. Often the waves beat high on the rocks, making a spectacle superb to behold. On a calm day the sea laps the rocks caressingly, and with Egg Rock light in the near distance and the ocean liners passing on the horizon, presents a scene of peaceful beauty that is unrivaled.

The cliff walk is left through the fine estate of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge. Keeping to the right after reaching the main roadway a place is reached where one can go out on the rocks and eat his lunch, or bathe or hire a boat. This spot, too, is rocky and wild and has none of the aspect of a picnic place. The little launch running up between steep rocks reminds one of the fjords of Norway where travelers in the land of the midnight sun are taken in boats up waters from which the rocks run tall and steep on either side. In this spot the only thing asked of the visitor is that he leave everything as immaculate as when he found it. In this way is preserved the natural beauty and freshness of the place. From there the way back to the car line or boat landing must be asked by the stranger.

Taking the walk leisurely but making no stops about an hour and a half are required to go from the boat landing around the walk and to return to the starting point. If it is desired to eat the lunch before starting on the cliff walk, when the car tracks have been reached upon leaving the boat there should be no turn to the right, but one should keep straight on to the water and then to the right until Senator Lodge's place is reached. There guideboards point the way. When the walk proper is reached one should turn first to the left, for the walk goes only a short distance beyond and then must be retraced.

Reaching the trolley tracks on the return the car is taken for Bass Point, for which a transfer is asked. The ride takes about 15 minutes and five cents is paid for it. The cars run every 15 minutes. If it is so desired the car can be taken on to Lynn. There eight cents is paid for the ride of 25 minutes. From

AUGUST FUR SALE

THE SHEPARD FUR SALE IN AUGUST is a fixed event. It occurs and recurs regularly.

Any retailer may jump in and hold a Fur Sale in August. However, with us, it is something much greater in scope, magnitude and economy than the usual random, hurriedly-hatched movement.

Our August Fur Sale has been reduced to an exact system. Skill, taste, judgment, intelligence are in control. We slip into the market during the dull months, when manufacturers and importers are willing to make concessions in order to promote activity. We scan the style-centres and keep informed concerning the relation between supply and demand.

The overshadowing, overtowering effort is to secure the richest furs at least prices. Exceptional and purely fortuitous conditions have given us a big advantage over our competitors this season.

Read the details and then compare Furs and prices.

THE FUR WORKERS' STRIKE IS STILL OPERATIVE

However, we were large buyers before the ferment began—before prices started soaring on account of scarce labor and disrupted organizations. The furs today advertised are the products of old, experienced craftsmen who were glad to be employed during the seasonal lull.

WERE WE TO BUY THEM NOW WE WOULD HAVE TO CHARGE MUCH MORE THAN OUR AUGUST - SALE PRICES

We show a great assortment of Mink, Black Fox, Black Lynx and Skunk—from small single-skin effects to large, broad shawls. Long coats are conspicuous in the display—Black Russian Pony, Marmot, Muskrat, Russian Sable, Squirrel, Caracul, Hudson Seal, Mole, Beaver, Persian Lamb.

We have some wonderful values in Fur and Fur-lined Automobile Coats. The savings are important enough to justify you in buying them during August.

It is well and good to say that if anything goes wrong you may bring the fur back and have it replaced, or receive the money paid for it. But it is BETTER SERVICE to sell FUR that WILL NOT GO WRONG, thus avoiding the trouble of having to make the transaction over again.

If buying only from the most reliable manufacturers, seeing that they use only sound, seasoned, well-cured prime pelts, and employ only the best skilled workmen, and subjecting every article to a rigid examination here before it goes on sale have everything to do with it, the Furs we are now offering have undoubtedly the right to be called ASSURED FURS.

WHAT EDITORS ARE SAYING

EDITORIAL comments presented to-day deal with subjects of general interest.

NEW YORK EVENING SUN—With the incoming tide of business activity the railroads of the country will be confronted by a huge problem. This problem will be the prompt handling of freight transportation, East, West, North and South, that will offer. . . . A serious present feature of the situation is that, with the rapid rise in the cost of equipment and maintenance, the railroads are troubled by the financial problem of getting ready to meet an inevitable emergency. The railroads should be given every consideration and aid in the solution of their difficult problem. Exchange is as essential as production; in truth, is a part of production, and the railroads are the arteries of commerce.

INDIANAPOLIS NEWS—The Daughters of the American Revolution are much distressed over the design that has been adopted for the new five-cent piece. The design has as its main adornment the likeness of what is commonly, though incorrectly, known as a buffalo. Only the head of the animal will be shown, but this will be enough to banish the Goddess of Liberty, which now occupies the honor position on the coin. So then D. A. R., and more lately other patriotic organizations, are entering formal protests against the change. There seems to be some confusion as to whether Secretary of the Treasury MacVegh and the director of the mint, Mr. Roberts, have made it plain to the designing artist that the "buffalo" adopted is really the bison of North America. But it may be taken for granted that the native American beast and not its European or Asiatic relative, will serve as the model. The patriotic organizations probably will not be able to excite widespread sympathy in their protest.

MEMPHIS NEWS-SCIMITAR—The

DARROW COUNSEL DENIES CONTEMPT

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—Earl Rogers, chief counsel for the defense in the trial of Attorney Clarence Darrow on the charge of bribery, planned today to oppose his sentence to jail for contempt by Judge Hutton, as the result of remarks passed by him regarding a witness before the court.

Mr. Rogers insists that he was not in contempt in court, when he referred to a state witness as a "perjurer" and he has refused thus far to withdraw his statement. The witness in question had testified that he was the "mysterious stranger" who accompanied detective Franklin to Darrow's office on the morning before Franklin's arrest on the charge of bribing George Lockwood.

BRITAIN TO TEST WIRELESS

NEW YORK—A London message to the New York Times says that the war office has appointed a committee to consider the application of the recent remarkable developments in wireless telegraphy to the needs of the army.

for use, exported from this country had for the first time in our history passed the billion dollar mark, also showed the great relative decrease in the amount of exported foodstuffs. In 1892 foodstuffs formed 50 per cent of our total exports. Ten years later they were but 38 per cent, and during the last fiscal year they had fallen to 20 per cent. Within another decade this percentage is likely to become much smaller. Because the exports of manufactures show such gratifying gains Americans are not inclined to worry over the decreased exports of food. Yet, in reality there is no little cause for anxiety in the figures recently published. They prove with what rapidity we are changing from an agricultural to an industrial nation and they also forecast the coming of the day when we shall be hard put to it to raise sufficient food for ourselves alone. Then we shall have to find some other country that, in turn, will become our market basket.

FASHIONS AND THE HOUSEHOLD

PRETTY BORDERED VOILE GOWN

Blouse is lapped in surplice style

THERE are a great many bordered fabrics this season, but no one of them is prettier than the voiles and marquisettes that make most attractive gowns with very little labor. This one shows a blouse that is lapped in surplice style and a straight skirt that can be either gathered or tucked at the upper edge. The band that finishes the lower edge is straight and it can be made from any preferred silk or satin, but in this case, it is made of charmeuse in the shade of cerise that is extremely fashionable this season.

To the woman who wants a new gown for the late summer, this one will be a boon. It can be made from any bordered material, or it can be made from any plain material bordered or trimmed in any such way. Plain voile or marquisette with cluny lace banding as trimming would make an exceedingly handsome effect and for the chemisette and center portions of the blouse can be used tucking or fancy net or any similar material. Finely dotted net laid in tucks is fashionable and dainty and the shadow nets make a pretty contrast with the heavy lace.

The one-piece sleeves are stitched to the armholes in what is known as the set-in style. They can be made in elbow length or to the wrists, and long sleeves are daily growing in favor.

If cotton materials are not wanted, the model can be used for any of the thin summer silks with success. Radium silk would be charming with bands of lace and, if it is desirable to wear the skirt over a foundation, in place of attaching the lower edge to a band, it can be made over a slip that is faced with contrasting material.

For the medium size, the blouse will require 3½ yards of bordered material 16 inches wide with ¾ yard 18 inches wide; the skirt two yards of flouncing 38 inches wide with ¾ yard of satin for the band.

The pattern of the blouse (7500) is cut in sizes from 34 to 42 inches bust measure and of the skirt (7431) in sizes from 22 to 30 inches waist measure. They can be bought at any May Manton agency or will be sent by mail. Address 102 West Thirty-second street, New York, or Masonic Temple, Chicago.

PROPER TRAINING FOR BOYS

Responsibility that rests on mothers

UPON the American mother is placed the tremendous responsibility of safeguarding the home, and training her boys for citizenship. Let us consider the home as a republic, a type in miniature of the larger republic—the state. It is in the home that the first lessons in good citizenship should be taught. If we improve the quality of citizenship, we elevate the nation. Our observation and experience alike teach us that so close is the relationship between the home and the state that whatever affects the well-being of the former reacts upon the larger family of the commonwealth, writes Margaret Woodward in Suburban Life.

We mothers have imbibed false ideas as to the best methods of training our boys. We have allowed the boy to come up like a weed, hoping and expecting that he will finally be turned out an ornament to his family and to the state. Let us once and for all cast aside these puerile notions, and settle down to the common-sense fact that your boy and mine need special training if we would make of them good citizens.

In the formation of a boy's character, I should place obedience as the cornerstone—obedience prompt and entire, obedience secured by force if it cannot be brought about in any other way. With many children force will seldom be required, especially if you have begun early to train them to submission to a higher authority. But obedience must be taught early. A prominent educator once said: "Give me a boy the first seven years of his life. After that you may do what you will with him. His habits and his character are formed." It is a well-known fact that the impressions of early childhood are inextinguishable. Ruskin said: "One thing above all others I desire to see children taught, and that is obedience." I was once intimately acquainted with a mother who had a wonderful faculty for securing the obedience and respect of her children. In the first place, she was just. She was consistent. She did not advocate a set of ten commandments for children, and an entirely different set for adults. She was truthful. She was honest. Her word was as good as a bond. She was kind and loving. She never nagged her children, for she had learned that before one can control others one must learn self-control.

In order to train our boys for good citizenship, we must inculcate habits of industry. Let every boy be obliged to work. A boy to be a good citizen, should be taught chivalry. He should be told that courage and kindness go hand in hand, that "the bravest are ever the tenderest."

REMADE FOR BOY

My pet economy is remodeling my husband's discarded clothing for my small son, says a Harpers Bazar contributor. I began by making little rompers and aprons from his old shirts. The tail and upper part of the sleeves were always good when the rest was worn out. Next I remodeled an old suit into a little Russian one, using the trousers for the knickerbockers and the coat for the blouse. A little piecing was necessary, but after being pressed carefully it did not show. Encouraged by my former success, I made over an overcoat. For an outlay of less than a dollar for lining, thread, and a pattern the boy has an overcoat that would cost $6 or $7 in a clothing store. The garments do not look home made, and the secret of it is the basting, pressing, and careful stitching.

"Fifty-two Years of Success"

TRIED RECIPES

SPANISH LETTUCE
REMOVE lower leaves and cut 12 fine lettuce in half, blanch in boiling water and drain, and put into saucepan. Sprinkle with salt and cover with slices of bacon or ham; moisten with a little broth; cover pan with greased paper and cook in oven. Drain and remove fat; then roll up the lettuce and lay on buttered toast. Cover with white sauce made with veal broth, and serve hot.

STUFFED LETTUCE
Put six lettuce heads into boiling water for five minutes, then fill inside with force meat. Tie the tops together and put in saucepan, adding one half pint of good white broth. Add salt and pepper; cover pan with greased paper and cook in oven for 15 minutes. Place lettuce (untied) on hot dish, flour sauce over them and serve hot.

ITALIAN BEANS
Boil one quart of French beans slowly till nearly tender; then dry and put to cook in butter. Mix one teaspoon of cream, one egg, some grated cheese and spice in saucepan, add some lemon juice, a little white-wine vinegar; boil and pour sauce over beans mixing well.

BROAD BEANS
Shell one quart of young broad beans and put in cold water. Put two quarts water in saucepan with one slice of ham, one stick celery, one bunch parsley, three cloves, 20 peppercorns and one bay leaf, and boil for one fourth hour. Then take out ham, celery, etc., and put in beans. Strain when tender; add four ounces of good butter and put on fire for a few minutes before serving.

ASPARAGUS ITALIAN
Cut the tender parts of two bunches of asparagus into short lengths and set to boil till quite tender. Take up, drain and put into a saucepan with three table-spoonfuls olive oil, one half teaspoonful lemon juice and seasoning of salt and paprika. Allow to get thoroughly hot, and serve on slices of fried bread.

SPLIT PEA SOUP
When making split pea soup take a ham bone, dropping the bone or any scraps into the kettle. When the peas are reduced to a pulp press all through a colander and set aside; it will keep for several days. The first day, serve it plain; the second day add to it a few spoonfuls of chopped onion or grated carrot previously cooked in a little dripping until tender; the third day season with celery salt or a dash of curry, and serve with it some crisp croutons.

HOME HELPS

Buy soap before you need it and keep it in a dry place so that it will harden. It will then last much longer.

Bent whalebones can be straightened by soaking them in boiling water for a few moments and then ironing them straight, says the San Diego Union.

Scorched fireproof dishes should be soaked in strong borax water till the unsightly brown marks upon them can be rubbed off with a cloth.

To keep a kettle clean, always empty out the water before refilling it. Very often the flat taste of tea is caused by using water that has already been boiled.

Use hearth stone for removing burnt marks from saucepans and dishes, and also for scouring discolored earthenware, sinks, etc. It is cheaper than pumice stone, and answers the purpose equally well.

CUCUMBERS IN VARIED WAYS

Creamed, stuffed and stewed

CUCUMBERS will be found very palatable if prepared according to directions here given:

Creamed Cucumbers—Peel six cucumbers, cut into quarters and put into cold water for one half hour. Remove seeds if mature. Place in a covered saucepan of salted boiling water and cook for one half hour, then lay on hot dish. Melt butter in saucepan and mix in one table-spoon of flour, add one half pint milk and stir till it boils. Add salt and pepper, a little more butter and flour sauce over cucumbers. Garnish with fried bread and serve hot.

Stuffed Cucumbers—Peel and cut cucumbers in two lengthwise. Remove seeds with spoon and fill with stuffing made of equal parts of minced white meat and soft breadcrumbs, salt, pepper, one egg and a little stock. Sprinkle top with breadcrumbs and lay them in one half inch of stock in baking dish. Bake in a moderate oven, occasionally filling up the stock. Thicken gravy out of baking dish with a very little flour and pour round them.

Stewed Cucumbers—Peel two or three cucumbers, cut into quarters and take out seeds. Put two ounces fresh butter and a sliced onion into frying pan and fry till onion browns; add cucumbers and stir till brown. Take them out of pan; put more butter in and stir it well;

BRITISH FABRICS

An exhibition was held in the conservatory of the royal botanic gardens of the Ladies All-British Fabric and Fashion Association, with the express purpose of proving that materials of home manufacture are sufficiently beautiful to meet all the needs of fashion in this country. For this purpose the dresses were worn by people who paraded up and down in front of the visitors, and certainly nothing could have been much more lovely than the fabrics displayed. It had been intended to reproduce these costumes as moving pictures by the kinemacolor process, says a London contributor to the Monitor, but the light was not sufficiently good to make the photographs a complete success.

CLEAN BOTTLES

If you are at a loss to know what to do when your cruets or bottles of any kind become stained on the inside, try tearing a newspaper up in small bits and half fill the cruet or bottle with cold water. Then shake briskly for a few moments, and you will notice how clear and bright the bottle will be, with every trace of stain removed.—Pittsburgh Sun.

DELIGHTFUL THINGS IN GRAY

Wraps and frocks and unique summer fads

THERE are many delightful things in gray among the summer vanities. One of the loveliest wraps brought over by an importer was of silver gray broche crepe—all in one tone, beautiful of design, exquisite of texture. The material was of unimaginable suppleness and had been draped by an artist. Not a single touch of trimming only the beautiful folds and lines and the lovely materials and the result was a distinction which surpassed that of any of the more fussy or elaborate models.

There are beautiful gray frocks too, all Quaker demureness, with relief of fine embroidered or valenciennes trimmed muslin or all soft, graceful draperies and trailing folds. Every shade from pearl to taupe is worn and some of the most impressive advance models for the autumn are in shades of the perennially popular taupe, says a New York fashion writer.

Summer fads have multiplied and a single unique note often makes a costume. A frock of sheerest white linen has, for instance, a single motif of heavy linen in some vivid color heavily embroidered in white posed upon the breast of the bodice or at the girdle line in front. A blue chiffon frock of clinging lines has a breadth of blue and white dotted foulard cleverly applied as drapery at the bottom of the chiffon skirt front and forming sides and full back for the skirt and sleeves for the bodice. A red and white striped silk muslin is made up with a little chemisette of sheerest white linen and with a wide, full breadth of the white linen hanging straight and free from the girdle in the back.

A duck egg blue tussor has a dainty guimpe or chemisette of white batiste and a girdle with wide pump bow of old red silk. A frock of white linen or other heavy white stuff very slightly embrod-

EMBROIDERY MOTIF FOR CARD CASE OR SACHET

Scroll of the design should be worked solid

A LINEN card case or sachet embroidered with this dainty motif will make a charming little gift. The scroll should be worked solid, with the dots and ovals as eyelets and the straight lines in the outline stitch. Use mercerized cotton No. 25 for the embroidery.

ACCORDION PLAITED SKIRTS

Bodice may be treated in same way

ONE sees simple skirts entirely accented by plaiting, mounted a little high at the waist and topped by quaintly picturesque little boleros. Silk or cotton voile, marquisette and tulle are favored materials for such skirts, with the bolero in silk or in lace and with perhaps a scarf girdle of the bolero silk or of contrasting color dropping its long ends over the plaited skirt.

The coat need not be of the bolero persuasion, may have tails of some kind, and there is no necessity of a coat, for charming little frocks are turned out with the accordion plaited skirt, a high girdle and bodice entirely of sheer lace or tulle. Still others, says the New York Sun, have both skirt and bodice accented by plaiting in some sheer stuff and merely floating sleeves on Watteau-like shoulder and train drapery of lace or other contrasting material.

Instead of the entirely plaited skirt, one may use the plaiting only in a sheer tunic veiling and a clinging underskirt. The straight, long tunic of accordion plaited tulle or other thin transparent material over plain or figured stuff is usually effective and becoming, detracting not at all from the straightness of the silhouette yet giving the touch of motion which marks the skirt of this season.

The plaited bib jabot brings the bodice into harmony with the skirt, and the same idea might be carried out for fall and winter wear with fair certainty of modishness. The line of tiny buttons down jabot and tunic fronts is a good detail, and a frock quite similar to this one and very charming had this line of buttons supplied by a band set with such buttons which ran all the way from throat to hem, passing over jabot and tunic.

A draped tunic over an underskirt of accordion plaiting limp and narrow in lines about the feet is another version of the accordion plaiting skirt idea.

Black and white is as usual an oft-repeated combination, and blue and white is very popular, the blue being used in all shades from Nattier and blue to marine and crow's wing. The old medium blue tones, cool and usually becoming, figure very considerably among present toilettes, usually in connection with white, and are especially pretty in the lineas, ensembles and certain combinations of silk with lingerie or sheer white stuff such as silk voile, marquisette and tulle.

An uncommonly good looking outing costume in this coloring had a Norfolk coat of old blue eponge with collar and cuff straps of white eponge and big white pearl buttons. The plain skirt was of white eponge.

The Norfolk with slight variations of cut and detail is enormously popular this summer in everything from white serge and white charmeuse to linen and tweed. It is of course always informal in air; but the plain Norfolk suits of white dull finish satin or charmeuse worn with dainty lingerie or tulle blouses have much elegance in their informality and make charming costumes even for afternoon at such a place as a country club or sporting event or on the street.

Separate Norfolk, too, play an important role in outing attire, and one of the latest things in this class is the separate Norfolk of soft natural tone tussor with black collar and cuffs for wear over morning frocks.

Chickering Pianos

RECENT experiments in the direction of tone production made by us have resulted in the perfection of a notable Grand Piano, THE STYLE X (next size larger than the famous Quarter Grand). It is an instrument of rare and exquisite tone, in which quality and not quantity has been the first consideration. It is a new departure in modern piano building, and in inviting attention to it we do so with much pride in the success of our efforts. These instruments may be seen at our show rooms, Tremont and Northampton Sts., near Massachusetts Ave., Boston.

Drain, cut into pieces one inch thick and put into a saute pan, with one ounce butter, a little flour, one half pint of veal broth. Stir well and add salt and pepper. Reduce for 15 minutes, stirring till it boils; add one teaspoon chopped parsley, one half teaspoon grated nutmeg, one half cupful of cream, and beaten yolks of two eggs. Put on fire again for three or four minutes, but do not let it boil; serve hot.

SAVE THE PINS

A good idea after buying a paper of new pins is to cut one line off at a time and not to dive into the whole paper at once. A sewing basket should have its pin cushion well supplied with pins, and when sewing a box should be near at hand into which all the pins can be tossed in a hurry, says the Philadelphia Times. In this way the floor will be spared its usual pin collection when sewing days come around.

A pin tray or small pin cushion should be on every girl's or woman's bureau, and the pins should be put into these at night when, perhaps, a pin or two will have to be taken out of the stock collar or belt. The pins used in pinning on a veil should always be put back in the veiling after it has been carefully folded up and before placing in the hat box or bureau drawer.

MILITARY REVOLT IN TURKEY BRINGS OUT VETERAN GENERAL

Ghazi Mukhtar Pasha, Once Popular Hero in War With Russia, Made Grand Vizier After Young Turks Fall

ALBANIA TO FRONT

(Special correspondence of the Monitor.) LONDON.—After a week of rumors, the new Turkish cabinet has been formed, on the precise lines indicated in the special cable despatches to The Christian Science Monitor. The unqualified statements to the effect that the grand vizierate had been accepted by Tewfik Pasha, the ambassador in London, the Monitor was able to deny. This office was offered to his excellency, but his acceptance of it he made subject to certain stipulations, to which the Sultan was unable to agree. Failing the ambassador in London, his majesty's choice fell upon Ghazi Mukhtar Pasha, and the veteran soldier accepted the task.

A generation ago, the name of Mukhtar Pasha was familiar from one end of Europe to the other. At the moment when the earthworks of Plevna were barring the advance of the Russians, and Suleiman Pasha was struggling to the relief of the besieged Osman, Mukhtar Pasha was holding back the Russian invasion of Asia Minor.

When the end came, whatever may have been said of the other Turkish generals, Osman and Mukhtar returned to Constantinople, not merely popular heroes, but with European reputations. Each of them was rewarded with the title of Ghazi, but the Sultan was not fond of popular heroes, and Mukhtar was sent, nominally on a great state mission, to Egypt. Today, at the call of the army, the veteran marshal has emerged from his retirement to form a new cabinet at this crisis of his country's fortunes.

Kiamil Pasha to Fore

In this cabinet the most commanding figure is Kiamil Pasha, the new minister for foreign affairs. Kiamil Pasha is undoubtedly a brilliant statesman, and, if possible, an even stronger friend of the United Kingdom than Asim Bey. He might, indeed, with even more truth than in the case of Said Pasha, be called the Englishman. His acceptance of a portfolio, declared one of the highest authorities in Europe, quite recently, talking to a representative of The Christian Science Monitor, is the deciding factor in the new ministry. If any man can overcome the difficulties with which the Ottoman empire is beset, it will be he, and this is admitted even by the champions of those powers who have least reason to wish to see him at the foreign office.

After the foreign office, of course, the most important office in the ministry is that of war. If it was the Salonika army corps which deposed Abdul Hamid, it may be said to be the Adrianople army corps which deposed the committee. Nazim Pasha could scarcely have been nominated to the war office if he had not been a persona grata to the army. The army appears, for the time being at any rate, to be tired of the part its chiefs have played in politics, and to be willing to submit to the self-denying ordinance Nazim Pasha has so emphatically announced his intention of enforcing, that, in future, no officer shall mix himself up in politics.

Sheikh-ul-Islam Changes

One other position in the ministry is of supreme importance in the present issue, that is that of Sheikh-ul-Islam. In Turkey, as elsewhere, the emancipation of women is a question which is forcing itself upon the notice of statesmen. It is perfectly true, as has been pointed out in The Christian Science Monitor more than once, that Zaidah Hanum is not typical of average Turkish womanhood. All the same, the distance between the harem and the hamlet is perceptibly narrowing, and the attempts made by the ex-Sheikh-ul-Islam to prevent this, were not sound either politically or morally. It is believed that this will be largely remedied under the administration of Djemaladdin Effendi, that the immediate result of his enlightened views will be a change, not only in the attitude of Islam towards its women, but in favor of reforms in many other directions. There is, however, perhaps no more vital question for Turkey today than that of Albania. The shrinkage of the Ottoman empire in Europe must be a source of perpetual anxiety at the Porte. Servia is gone, Roumania and Montenegro, Bulgaria and eastern Roumelia, Bosnia and Herzegovina. If Albania were to go, what could hold Macedonia, and then?

The Albanian question has so often been explained in The Christian Science Monitor that it is unnecessary to go once more over the ground on this occasion. When, however, the Turkish troops at Monastir became disaffected, and certain of them deserted, and, taking to the mountains, threatened to make common cause with the Albanians, the margin of safety was narrowed to a hair's-breadth. The appointment of Ferid Pasha, as minister of the interior, has, for the moment, saved the situation. The pasha is not only an Albanian, but a member of a prominent Albanian family, and his acceptance of the office, and his prompt abolition of the state of siege, has been received by the ever turbulent mountaineers as an indication that the long-demanded reforms are about to be initiated.

Effect on War Is Waited

Mukhtar Pasha's own son has gone to the ministry of marine. With hardly any fleet to dispose of, the office is not an important one. Still, while the war with Italy continues, the mere defense of the coast must prevent it from becoming a sinecure. What effect the eclipse of the committee will have upon the war, it is still too early to say.

One thing only is certain, that the rumors which have been current with regard to Enver Bey may be dismissed. He retains the confidence of his country, and the idea of his occupying himself in building up an Arab empire in Tripoli, over which he is to reign, is scouted as inconceivable. Some time ago, an Englishman who had resided all his life in Turkey, and who was personally acquainted with the bey, declared, to a representative of this paper, that he was an over-rated man. That is not the opinion of the Turks in high office.

Only recently, one of them, whose word should be final, told another representative of The Christian Science Monitor that the very last thing Enver Bey would ever dream of doing would be to place the interests of the country in subordination to his own. He is a loyal and patriotic Turk, whose energetic and ceaseless efforts to raise an Arab army capable of withstanding the Italians, have been misinterpreted abroad. Today, he is still at Benghazi, devoting himself to the service of his country.

The new ministry came into power on the anniversary of the day the Salonika army corps wrung the new constitution from Abdul Hamid. It is once more a military revolt in the empire which has brought about a new regime, the Adrianople military league in place of the Salonika committee. Today, the league is as powerful as the committee once was. It remains to be seen whether it can maintain its power, and if so, how it will use it.

MARBLEHEAD FOLKS ENJOY PAGEANT OF OLD COLONIAL DAYS

MARBLEHEAD, Mass.—Fully 1800 persons witnessed a pictorial history of Marblehead during the colonial period Tuesday afternoon in Hathaway field, Clifton, when the first performance of "From Kingdom to Colony" was given. The pageant is being repeated this afternoon and evening. More than 300 are taking part.

The performance started with a prologue in the year 1649, showing a Naumkeag Indian camp near Forest river. There was a characteristic Indian dance, and a little domestic episode in the lives of the ancestors of the characters in the main drama, which followed.

The time is 100 years later, just at the outbreak of the revolutionary war. The scene showed the wisteria-covered porch of the John Devereux house. There is a plan by patriots to bring powder to Marblehead in spite of the British. Dorothy Devereux is told to notify her fellow townsmen by signal lights whether it would be safe for them to land.

Then the drama is unfolded in the following tableaux: Dorothy's visit to Nurse Lecrow's cottage, meeting of Dorothy and Cornet Southern in the woods, wedding of Mary Broughton and Jack Devereux, abduction of Dorothy by Southern, marriage of Dorothy to Southern by strategy, arrest of Southern as an English spy at Grey Horse inn, arrival of Dorothy and Mary at Grey Horse inn, Dorothy pleads with General Washington for Southern's life, Dorothy and Southern's departure for England.

Miss Ella G. Ballard made a charming Dorothy, while Andrew H. Stone did remarkably well in the role of Joseph Devereux. Between scenes Miss Helen True sang "Flow Gently, Sweet Afton" and "The Last Rose of Summer," and Mrs. R. M. Cook, made up as the Spirit of Night, sang "The Fairy Lake."

The other features of the pageant included a ribbon dance by young girls, a minuet, a flower festival and a maypole dance. The floats, included "Yankee Doodle," "Signing the Declaration of Independence" and "The 13 Original States." In the latter were Rose Caswell, Marion Lancy, Eliza Bartlett, Alice Snow, Ethel Nicholson, Elsie Knight, Madeline Brown, Alice Dalrymple, Beulah Tucker, Mary Lyon, Dorothy Shaw, Marion Roads and Myrtle Pierce.

The committee in charge of the pageant was Miss Elizabeth B. Brown, chairman; Benjamin J. Lindsey, secretary and treasurer; Mrs. W. E. Prichard, Mrs. Marie J. Morgan and William I. Proctor. James A. Reynolds was master of dancing and Benjamin I. Knapp was stage manager.

George Lowell Tracy, who staged the pageant, was musical director. The performances are to raise a fund of $1500 to complete the purchase of the historic Lee mansion in Marblehead.

ANNOUNCE DELAY IN START OF NEW BOAT EVANGELINE

Although the new steamer Evangeline, which is to run between Boston and Halifax, N. S., was expected to arrive here early in August, she will not come in before the latter part of September, probably the 25th.

The Evangeline was launched July 4 from the builders' yards in Scotland, more than a month behind her contracted time because of the coal and labor strikes in England. The engines and boilers are already installed and the finishing touches now being added, according to A. W. Perry, president of the Plant line, today. The steamer is equipped with every modern device for safety and comfort. She will probably make one trip each week from here, calling at Charlottetown, Hawkesbury and Halifax.

According to present plans, the Evangeline will sail from the other side about the middle of September, reaching Halifax first. She will then take on passengers and freight and make her initial trip in the service to Boston.

DAM COMPLETED, SAN DIEGO NOW HAS BIG WATER SUPPLY

System Includes Four Reservoirs With a Capacity Second Only to the Aqueduct of Los Angeles

PROJECT COMPLEX

SAN DIEGO, Cal.—Southern California Mountain Water Company is the largest of its kind in this state, outside of the aqueduct system of Los Angeles. It has four reservoirs which give a total storage capacity for San Diego of 29,180,000,000 gallons as against 26,000,000,000 gallons, the supply of San Francisco for 450,000 people. The reservoirs are the lower Otay dam, upper Otay dam, Chollas heights and the Morena dam is now completed.

The lower Otay was commenced in 1887 and completed in 1897, to the 130-foot level above the stream bed. The masonry core at the base is 62 feet wide, 28 feet high and 160 feet across the valley of the Otay river. It has a steel plate core protected with concrete on each side and is composed of loose rock fill. It has a water shed of about 100 square miles behind it with an average altitude of about 1600 feet.

The upper Otay dam is composed of reinforced concrete, built on the arch type, and is curved upstream with a radius of 350.26 feet from the center line of the crest. The dam is only four feet thick on top and 14 feet thick at the base, being 84 feet high and stepped with offsets on the downstream side. This dam was built by C. M. Bose under the general direction of M. Babcock.

The Chollas heights dam is located along the route of the main supply pipe from the lower Otay reservoir into San Diego, and is built across the Chollas valley about four miles from the city limits. It is situated on a tract of land comprising 180 acres. At the 25-foot contour, the Chollas reservoir contains over 90,000,000 gallons of water, being about five times the capacity of the new University heights reservoir, which has cost the city about $110,000. It was completed in 1901, under the direction of E. F. Tabor as engineer. The main function of this reservoir is to act as an emergency source in case the main pipe line from Otay should be interfered with. It holds enough to supply the city for 15 days.

The Morena dam was begun in 1896 and operations were suspended in 1898, with the dam partially completed, and it was allowed to rest until May, 1909, when the work was actively resumed. The dam is built high enough to impound water to the 150-foot contour, thus giving a storage capacity of about 15,000,000,000 gallons.

Through the solid bed of rock on the south side of the dam there has been drilled a tunnel 387 feet long, eight feet wide and seven and a half feet high, through which the water from the reservoir will be drawn off. From the outlet of this tunnel outlet the water for the present will follow the natural grade of the Cottonwood creek until picked up at the site of the Barrett dam by the Dalzura conduit.

Construction operations at the dam were prosecuted by means of two cableways and seven derricks, and 100 men were constantly employed thereon until its completion. The work was finished last month.

The Dalzura conduit leads the water from the Cottonwood watershed into that of the lower Otay. It is 13.38 miles long from the intakes to its present western terminus at the Dalzura divide, whence it throws the water into the Dalzura creek, through which it flows at present a distance of 12 miles along the natural channel of the same into the lower Otay reservoir. In 1907 this work was commenced and was completed in the beginning of 1909. The grade is four feet fall in 5000, thus dropping about 52 feet between the intakes at Pine and Cottonwood creeks and the discharge point at Dalzura. The canal has a carrying capacity, when full, of 40,000,000 gallons in 24 hours.

From Barrett dam south, canal, flume and tunnel alternate as the topography and location requirements make necessary. There are 17 tunnels from 40 to 2000 feet long, aggregating 9219 feet. There are 56,957 feet of concrete lined aqueduct, and it is proposed eventually to roof the whole of the conduit with a reinforced concrete, about one half mile of this now being done to avoid damage from slides. The water is carried across Pine creek by means of a bridge and then follows the north bank of the Cottonwood river until it crosses the hill at Dalzura through a tunnel 976 feet long.

WORKINGS OF RUSSIAN PRISON SYSTEM SEEN

Group of political prisoners on their way to exile — Miss Shkolnik, who escaped recently from Siberia, is seen at the left hand end of the top row

(Special to the Monitor)

LONDON—It is frequently said that one half of the world does not know how the other half exists. It is certainly true that few people outside Russia itself really appreciate the horrors and iniquities perpetrated by the authorities in the empire of the Czar. So repulsive are many of the details that if it were even possible to publish them in their bare hideousness many would feel that they were exaggerated, and that such things could not possibly take place in this twentieth century.

It is generally taken for granted that before a prisoner is cast into prison, he is tried in a court of justice. In Russia, however, it does not in the least follow that a trial should precede imprisonment and there are in Russia today tens of thousands of prisoners, the great majority of them innocent, who have been detained by what is termed an "administrative order." There are tens of thousands also who have been sent to Siberia, equally without trial.

Conduct Is Worse

The disturbances of 1905 are supposed to have resulted in a constitutional form of government; it is, however, chiefly since 1905 that the condition of prisoners, of political prisoners especially, has gone from bad to worse. The reason of this is probably that 20 years ago the number of political prisoners was comparatively few, and those who were imprisoned were generally of the educated class and were therefore respected to some extent by the governors, whereas today there are more political prisoners by many thousands, the great majority being of the working classes.

Today the number of the so-called offenders is so great that six to eight hundred are to be found herded in a prison originally constructed for 300. The great majority of these are imprisoned "pending investigation," and, as explained above, the investigation frequently never takes place.

In the course of a conversation with a friend who had himself been detained for some time in one of these prisons he declared that it is well nigh impossible for any one but a Russian familiar with the country to really grasp the horrors of the situation and he gave more than one instance of the total absence of any sense of justice and of the absolute brutality and barbarity of those in authority.

Thus political prisoners are, in most cases, deprived of all civil rights; they are sent to what is termed Katorga, which means that if married the marriage is considered annulled; they have no longer any right of inheritance, they no longer possess any property, nor may they have any further dealings with their children or relations.

Justice Absent

With regard to the "investigation," this sometimes takes place five or six years after the prisoners have been detained, and, as an instance of the total absence of justice, he referred to the trial of the Armenian leaders, during which it was proved that 36 of the documents used by the prosecution were forged by the magistrate, Lyzhin, in charge of the case, and that even after it had been decided that the documents should not be used, the prisoners were condemned on evidence collected by the same magistrate. These prisoners were sent to Katorga, deprived of all civil rights, merely because they were guilty of the crime of forming a nationalist party. These men, of whom there were 160 or 170, were arrested in 1905 and not tried until 1912. "In Russia," my friend declared, "there is no hope of justice."

Asked as to whether there was any possibility of obtaining redress, even by paying a sum of money, he explained that this might be done in some instances, but generally the unfortunate individual just sits in prison, and maybe some years later on, some excitement occurs, and it is quite likely that he is changed in the rush of the moment, or sent further away into Siberia.

Again, the number of innocent people punished, and even hanged, is appalling. To quote but one instance a whole family was murdered. The real culprits were not found at once, so an innocent Jew was arrested, and in spite of incontrovertible evidence showing that he had been 40 miles away from the place and working in the fields at the time, he was executed, and some of his friends, equally innocent, were sent to Katorga. Some time later, the real culprits were betrayed, and complete information was given to the government. They refused, however, to re-try those sent to Katorga, and did not even attempt to offer an apology for having executed an innocent man.

Duma Members in Exile

"It will be remembered also," he continued, "that 160 Liberal members of the first Duma and 55 Social Democrat members of the second Duma, were arrested for holding too liberal views. The whole of the second case was got up by

'agents provocateurs,' and was so unjust and disgusting that the counsel for the defence gave up their briefs on the first day of the trial, and refused to continue, added to which the accused refused to attend. The case, therefore, proceeded with neither accused nor counsel, and the members were sentenced and sent to Katorga in Siberia. Later on one of the agents provocateurs confessed that the whole case had been trumped up, but there has been no way of obtaining redress for the exiles who are still in Siberia. This," he added, "is a special instance of Russian justice."

In Riga, also, horrors and tortures of an unmentionable nature are still perpetrated. Not long ago, in 1907, a thoroughly trustworthy gentleman, an American citizen, visited the prison in Riga, and obtained such evidence first-hand that the Russian government itself was not able to wholly refute it, but admitted that part, at least, of what he said was true. The government further promised to prosecute the responsible officials. Instead, however, of being prosecuted, these officials were promoted.

The above instances are perhaps sufficient to show that no language is too forcible to describe what is taking place under the government of the Czar. Instances such as the above could be collected without end, and evidence can be obtained first-hand from the very few who have managed to escape from the thralldom of the prisons in Siberia.

There is now in Europe a young lady, Marie Shkolnik, who succeeded in escaping in a wonderful manner from the Akatouy women's convict prison in eastern Siberia, and there are 19 other young ladies left in this same prison, almost all condemned to penal servitude for life. It would be impossible to describe the horrible conditions under which they are compelled to exist, want of fresh air, improper and insufficient food being the least of the disgusting experiences they are compelled to undergo.

For obvious reasons the manner in which Marie Shkolnik effected her escape cannot be described here, but the details she is able to supply of the torture undergone by young women in the Russian empire today will materially assist those engaged in doing whatever is possible to improve the lot of those still in prison.

With the object of affording such assistance, societies have been formed in England and other countries, for the purpose of collecting money to be forwarded to the proper quarters as well as with a view to acquainting the public with what is actually taking place in such prisons as those at Nerchinsk, Vladimir, Orel and the "Boutyrki" at Moscow.

Charity Is Stifled

The relentless tyranny of Russian officialdom, a tyranny maintained to oppress the people, to stifle justice and prevent the slightest act of charity, is well illustrated by the attitude of the government towards those desirous of assisting people affected by the recent famine. In any other country the formation of societies to help those unable to help themselves is taking place almost daily. In Russia, however, all private help for the peasants during their recent troubles was forbidden. Any one anxious to subscribe money was compelled to send it to the treasury who would deal with it.

The authorities, afraid lest the people might become more human, and gradually, perhaps, a little better educated, even gave peremptory orders for the closing of the soup kitchens organized in many of the villages and attended mostly by women and girls. There were also innumerable instances of attempts being made to prevent the free distribution of bread. "The attitude of Russian officials," my friend said, "is not only inhuman, it is idiotic."

It would be possible to quote other innumerable instances of the iniquities of Russian officialdom, giving the names of the sufferers as well as such details of what occurred as to afford abundant evidence of the accuracy of the reports. Sufficient has, however, already been said to point out how much there remains to be done to free the subjects of the Czar from the bonds by which they are at present held.

CUSTOM REGULATIONS TRAVELERS SHOULD KNOW

Passengers on steamers bound for the United States will receive a sheet of paper containing two forms of declaration. The one in black is for citizens of the United States; the one in red for non-residents. The law provides that citizens of the United States may bring in articles valued under $100, but there are restrictions relating to this which should be carefully noted. The following instructions are taken from the leaflet furnished by the treasury department. If in doubt regarding the meaning of any clause in the declaration or instructions the purser will explain.

Residents of the United States must declare all articles which have been obtained abroad by purchase or otherwise.

Articles taken from the United States and remodeled, repaired, or improved abroad must be declared, and the cost of such remodeling, repairing, or improving must be separately stated.

The following articles are dutiable: Household effects, including books, pictures, furniture, tableware, table linen, bed linen, and other similar articles, unless used abroad by the owner for a period of a year or more.

Goods in the piece.

Articles of any nature intended for sale, or for other persons.

The following articles are free if under $100 in value and if necessary for comfort and convenience for the purpose of the journey, and not for sale nor for other persons:

Clothing.

Toilet articles, such as combs, brushes, soaps, cosmetics, shaving and manicure sets, etc.

Personal adornment, jewelry, etc., and cameras, musical instruments, etc.

Clothing and other personal effects taken out of the United States by the passenger if not increased in value or improved in condition while abroad. If increased in value or improved in condition, they are dutiable on the cost of the repairs.

NON-RESIDENTS

Non-residents of the United States are entitled to bring in free of duty, without regard to the $100 exemption, such articles as are in the nature of wearing apparel, articles of personal adornment, toilet articles, and similar personal effects, necessary and appropriate for their wear and use for the purpose of the journey and present comfort and convenience and which are not intended for other persons or for sale.

LA SALLE AT MADISON ST. CHICAGO

EARL FITZWILLIAM'S HOME LIES IN BEAUTIFUL COUNTRY

(Drawn specially for the Monitor)

The garden front, Wentworth, Yorkshire, standing almost in center of park of 1500 acres

(Special to the Monitor)

LONDON—The event of King George's visit to Wentworth makes Earl Fitzwilliam's Yorkshire seat a place of interest. The surrounding country, that goes by the quaint name of the Dukeries, is considered to be among the most beautiful in England. One can be surrounded by the beauties of moors and woods and rushing rivers at one moment and in a few more find oneself in one of the most interesting of the busy centers of England—Sheffield.

Its great steel works are extremely interesting, for there you can see from the smallest steel knives and scissors to the biggest guns, and every part and detail of the greatest battleships turned out complete. There are coal mines and iron ore at the very doors of the city and

Earl Fitzwilliam himself is an expert miner.

Wentworth stands almost in the center of a park of 1500 acres, an interesting feature of which are the herds of both wild cattle and Indian cattle with which it abounds. The house is in the form of an irregular quadrangle, enclosing three courts. The south front measures 700 feet long. The center portico is formed by eight Corinthian columns on a raised staircase supporting a pediment, on which stand three statues.

The garden side of the house, in part of which the King stayed while on his visit, is more picturesque, for some bits of the earlier mansion still remain. The house is full of valuable pictures, but the most famous are those by Van Dyck, who painted them while living at Wentworth. The stables have accommodation for 150 horses. Underneath the vaulted cellars runs a stream five feet deep.

WITH OUR ADVERTISERS

Prominent among the educational institutions of the South is the Virginia College for Young Women at Roanoke. The main object of instruction in this college is the formation of character. Special attention is given to the distinctive characteristics of girls and women. To this end the work is divided into four general departments—the hygienic, the intellectual, the social and religious, the latter holding first place in the system of teaching. This is not sectarian, but according to the generally accepted theories of the day.

The system of teaching is largely by lectures and full explanation upon the text. In connection with every subject the teacher is expected to take the mind of the student through a wide and interesting field of thought. The training and development of the mind by analysis and generalization are the main objects sought. Attention is given to that general culture which pertains to order, habits, prompt attention to duty and the observance of the proprieties of individual and social life. The course of instruction includes English, Bible literature, French, German, Greek, Latin, history, mathematics, philosophy and psychology, science and physics. Instruction is given also in domestic technology, sewing, piano, organ, voice, guitar, violin, zither, mandolin, banjo, art, expression, business, etc.

Home life of the school is featured. This is both for the comfort, happiness and care of the girls and their educational development. Southern women are noted hostesses, and this grace it is the wish of the college to preserve, and it can be done best, it is believed, through its own home life.

The college is beautifully situated in the southern portion of the valley of Virginia. It is half a mile beyond the city limits on a gradual slope of a mountain. The institution is surrounded by a beautiful landscape of field and forest. Pupils have the advantages of a quiet country home and easy access by electric cars to all parts of the city.

Mattie P. Harris is president of the college and Mrs. Gertrude Harris Boatwright vice-president. For further information Mrs. Harris should be addressed at Virginia College, Roanoke, Va.

to have them go there, for as a rule they return home manly and sturdy, the kind of a boy that everybody likes to know.

The school curriculum is arranged for boys under 16 years and is intended to prepare them for the final years at the best preparatory schools of New England, of which there are many in Massachusetts. The number enrolled is limited, in order to allow careful, individual work where needed, and yet give a possible classification that supplies for the individual the stimulus and incentive of rank in scholarship.

Danforth offers the advantages of a quiet, refined home where simple living is the rule and intimate attention is given to the well being, the habits, the deportment and the schooling of the pupils. The herding, hardships and generalities sometimes encountered in a large school are escaped.

One of the objects of the master, James Chester Flagg, is to keep the boys happy and contented by giving them every wholesome opportunity for enjoyment. He therefore endeavors to keep them occupied all the time, out of doors as well as in the school rooms. To this end frequent trips are made in different directions and for different purposes. They walk and picnic even in winter, and visit such places as machine shops, shoe shops, the navy and ship yards, museums, and many similar places that give boys much pleasure and information. The school estate is ample and isolated enough to give the boys all the freedom possible and all the fun and sports. The farm supplies the school with all the good things a farm should. The boys do none of the work of the farm, but they are encouraged to have pets, gardens, hens, pigeons or similar cares. One little fellow made quite a success with a few hens last year and next year will increase his flock.

While no surveillance is exercised over the boys the teachers are constantly with them, and it is believed that no better work can be done. John Chester Flagg, the master, may be reached by addressing him at the Danforth school, Framingham, Mass. Framingham is but a short distance from Boston.

If housewives realized how simple Voltie is to apply there would be no more worn table ware or plumbing fixtures, no more worn gold or silver, brass or nickel, copper or tin. In plating with the silver, for instance, whatever the article may be—knife, fork or spoon, pitcher, ink-stand, toilet article or other metal decoration—it must be thoroughly cleaned of all grease and dirt with a regular cleaner, preparatory to plating. Then the Voltie powder is placed on a small piece of paper, and with a small rag dipped in pure water, then into the powder, the latter is lightly rubbed over the surface to be plated. As soon as the powder is wet an electrolytic action occurs similar to that in ordinary electroplating baths. Instantly the silver takes hold and covers the surface of the article with a thin film or plate.

By rubbing more powder on the surface the plate is thickened. A heavy plate can be made in from five to seven minutes.

This process may be put to numerous uses. Worn pieces can be restored; silver toilet articles, for example, can be plated with gold, and inexpensive table ware or toilet articles can be plated with very little cost. Gold can be deposited successfully directly on steel, heretofore an impossibility. The nickel Voltie is used on all articles of steel, iron and brass ware such as golf clubs, bicycle, motor car and yacht fittings, engine fittings, engineer's tools, harness and carriage fittings and fireplace fixtures. The plating is guaranteed to stand any test.

The mail order department of the American Voltie Company is at 225 West Thirty-ninth street, New York. Voltie is on sale at leading stores.

Pearline is an old household cleanser that continues to hold its place after many new and alleged superior articles have been placed on the market and heralded near and far. It cleanses everything about the house. It loosens dirt, cuts grease whether on cooking utensils, the kitchen floor or elsewhere, and therefore is an aid in cleansing. It does its work quickly and thoroughly. Each package contains directions as to just how the contents should be used, although these are necessary only to the novice.

Pearline is manufactured only by James Pyle & Sons, New York, but is sold by all grocers.

WORK ENOUGH ON CANADIAN FARMS

Unusually bountiful harvests now promised in the Canadian West, estimated at from 200,000,000 to 250,000,000 bushels of wheat, which far exceed all previous records, will require an army of over 50,000 men from outside to assist the farmers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and all who go, it is said, can obtain employment at good wages.

The usual farm laborers' excursions will be run from eastern Canada, the fare, second class, being $10 to Winnipeg from points in Ontario and Quebec and $12 from Canadian Pacific stations in New Brunswick. At Winnipeg, arrangements have been made to forward all applicants to the points where their services are required, west of Winnipeg, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, (not west of Edmonton, Calgary and MacLeod) at one half cent per mile, with a minimum of 50 cents. The excursions will begin on Aug. 12.

INDIAN BOYS AND GIRLS TAUGHT TO WORK BY HASKELL INSTITUTE

Education Provided Them by Kansas School Intended to Make Self-Support a Result of Their Study

IDEALS EMPHASIZED

Efforts to make the American Indian self-supporting center in a number of schools where young men and young women of that race are furnished the opportunity to obtain educations that are thorough and practical. The Monitor presents today an article dealing with Haskell Institute as the first of a series devoted to schools of this helpful character.

EDUCATION of Indian young people in ways so practical that they may be fitted to earn their own livings when they leave the institution is the main purpose of Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kan. Graduation exercises of 1912 at the Haskell Institute were in evidence of this aim to make the wards of the American government self-sustaining. The definite ideals of the institute never were more strikingly emphasized than when the graduating class, on June 14 last, was put to the test.

The location of the institute is considered particularly satisfactory because Lawrence, touched by the Santa Fe and Union Pacific railroads, is within easy reach of the Indian population throughout the West. Distant only 40 miles from Kansas City, Mo., the city has the advantage of all the lines running north and east from that great railroad center.

A previous graduating class was composed of Indian young men and women representing 21 tribes, as follows: Caddo, Iowa, Miami, New York, Peoria, Shawnee, Sioux, Cheyenne, Kaw, Muncie, Omaha, Piegan, Wasco, Washoe, Chipewia, Klamath, Navajo, Pawnee, Pima, Pottawatomie and Winnebago.

A decidedly interesting feature of the Haskell Institute is the Indian Leader, a weekly newspaper printed by the Indian students. Just as the several Indian schools in the United States display certain characteristics that distinguish them from each other, so in this matter of publications there are marked differences between the Indian Leader and other publications aiming to spread information about the education of Indian youth. At Haskell, it appears, diversity of vocation is the striking note. The Indian Leader reflects this idea

Domestic, industrial and business graduates of Haskell Institute, grouped before exercises at completion of course by the mass of interesting material in its columns.

Aims in Teaching

C. E. Birch, principal of Haskell Institute, is a stickler for good English among his pupils. His work is no less effective in the direction of a curriculum that shall teach the young men to become efficient carpenters, farmers, printers, and the young women to perfect themselves in dairying, baking and sewing. Furthermore, the business training is considered one of the foremost aims of the Haskell Institute. It may be on account of the prominence attaching to the business and the academic departments that Professor Birch is so insistent on the teaching and learning of correct English.

Theatricals, with particular reference to English annunciation and historical accuracy figure in the regime at Haskell Institute. Speaking of a recent event of this nature, the Lawrence Journal-World said:

"Ollanta" was splendid. The Indian play given by the students last night was the heaviest drama ever staged at Haskell. There was not a single hitch in the entire performance and the scenery and costumes were magnificent. The pomp of ancient Peru and the gorgeous costumes of the Incas' court were depicted on the stage and carried out in detail. The students entered into the spirit of the play and the result was excellent."

There is something strikingly significant in this acting of a play based on South American Indian lore by members of the race who are students in a northern institution for learning. "Ollanta" is conceded by historians to be a genuine production of the ancient Peruvian Indians, and is known as the "Quicha" or "Inca Drama of Ollanta." Under the encouragement of the Spanish conquerors it was reduced to writing in the seventeenth century. It did not attract the attention of the civilized world until 1837, when it was translated from the Spanish into English by Sir Clement R. Markham.

"Ollanta" is called the 1912 school play of Haskell Institute. Here were young men and women, occupied during their hours of schooling with everything that tends to equip them to meet modern requirements, suddenly transformed into characters that lived and planned as did their forbears in the southern hemisphere long ago. Those who witnessed the play found it intensely interesting to watch the modern Indian of the North in the role of the ancient Indian of the tropics. There is more than one reason, it would seem, why the red man feels proud of his ancestry.

Commercial Instruction

Getting back to more matter-of-fact issues, the commercial department of Haskell Institute seems to well deserve the praise bestowed upon it by those who have had the benefit of its teaching. Typewriting, rapid penmanship, quick calculation, shorthand—these are some of the things in which the students are perfecting themselves. How well the commercial department has done with the students was shown in the commencement day exercises at which Superintendent Wise distributed the diplomas. These diplomas were arranged in Indian baskets and tied with class colors—the commercial in red and white, domestic science with yellow and white, industrial purple and gold, and eighth grade purple and white. Love of the picturesque is seen to be a trait of the Indian at all times. Superintendent Wise spoke of the undergraduates, whose hard work, he said, deserved recognition; and he presented certificates to 31 pupils who had completed eighth grade studies.

In describing a school like this one at Lawrence, it is usually the routine work that comes in for consideration. But Haskell Institute offers something of interest both Sundays and week days. This fact, perhaps, prompted M. M. Thorne, general secretary of Haskell Y. M. C. A., to contribute a paper to the Indian Leader on "A Sunday at Haskell."

"The question, 'What do you do at Haskell on Sunday?'" writes Mr. Thorne, "has often been asked by persons who are interested in the school. Such a question concerning week days seldom comes up, as the mission of an industrial school such as Haskell is well known. Even the most disinterested individual knows that the class rooms, industrial and domestic departments and farm, furnish ample opportunities and tasks for the students during the secular days of the week. With Sunday, however, it is different. Naturally, the usual activities of the school must largely cease. Yet there are 600 or 700 students who must be kept from idleness. It is quite evident, then, that Sunday should have its program of activities, although of course vastly different from the program of the week.

Sunday Activities

"On Sunday the rising bell at Haskell rings at 6 o'clock—a half hour later than during the week. The pupils breakfast at 7. For an hour after breakfast they are free to themselves."

Mr. Thorne then describes how the students attend Sunday school, a large number availing themselves of the opportunity to go to Lawrence and attend services at the respective church to which they belong. Dinner comes at 12:30 o'clock. After that the students are free until 3 o'clock, when the regular chapel service is held. Attendance at this service is compulsory and the students are dressed uniformly. The girls appear in white shirtwaists and blue skirts, the boys in their cadet suits of blue. Various clergymen from Lawrence officiate at the chapel services. Sometimes a visiting official or a noted visitor from out of town addresses the students. The singing is led by a mixed choir, in charge of the teacher of vocal music.

The chapel service concludes at 4 o'clock, when the pupils are free until supper time. If the weather is particularly inviting, there may be a dress parade on the campus in which the entire regiment of boy cadets participate, led by the Haskell band. After the line is formed and the band strikes up the "Star Spangled Banner" the two battalions, headed by the band, pass in review before the colonel and his staff. Usually there are many visitors among the spectators at these drills. When the review is over the students march into the dining room for supper.

Band Concerts Enjoyed

There is another enjoyable Sunday feature in the band concerts, which are given ordinarily just before dusk. The more than 30 members of the Haskell band have quite a reputation throughout that section and the concerts not only bring out the entire student force and teaching staff, but people come from far and near in automobiles or on foot to enjoy the fine entertainment.

After the band concludes its performance the students are free to attend religious meetings, if they so desire. The Young Women's Christian Association counts many members among the Haskell students. The association meets in the girls' hall. Then there is the "Volunteers," composed of the smallest boys of the school, and they meet in the music room of the school building. The Junior Y. M. C. A., composed of boys not quite large enough to unite with the senior association, meets each Sunday evening in one of the class rooms. There has been a Y. M. C. A. at Haskell for about 20 years. When "Taps" is sounded, after the services in the evening, Sunday activity at Haskell Institute has come to a close.

It is the aim of Haskell Institute to equip the students so thoroughly that they can not only get along in the world, but also prove worthy citizens. The entire curriculum of the school may be said to be based upon this desire to make the young men and women helpful factors in American civic life. Fayette A. McKenzie, special agent of the United States Indian census, has some interesting data at hand which bear out the claim made in many quarters that the Indians are rapidly making themselves known as citizens in the United States. Mr. McKenzie concludes from his observations that the red man is not vanishing, as has been claimed so frequently.

The total value of Indian property is placed at $678,000,000 and the total acreage of Indian lands is 71,000,000 acres. Education on lines like those in vogue at Haskell Institute, should be a powerful help to the Indian in carrying out his life mission.

ADVANCED IDEAS ARE EMBODIED IN SCHOOL BUILDINGS

HARRISBURG, Pa.—A striking illustration of the manner in which Pennsylvania is building school houses is afforded by the records of the state board of education, which under the school code is charged with the duty of approving all plans for school buildings and additions, so that the most advanced ideas in light, safety and sanitation may be secured.

Since the board has been in operation every school district making an improvement, including a number of the cities, has filed plans and the number received thus far aggregates 280. Of this number the board has received for approval 160 since the middle of May. This includes a number of high school buildings of the latest design and costing over $100,000, although the bulk of the plans are from small districts and call for buildings of from four to 10 rooms.

All of the plans received by the board are inspected by H. C. Richards of Philadelphia, acting architect of the department, who has visited many of the localities.

THEORY ABOUT NATURAL MAN THAT REMAINS TO BE PROVED

Mysterious Excellence Is Supposed to Exist in the Absence of Certain Things, Education, for Example

MAN'S REAL DESTINY

By JOHN HUNTER SEDGWICK

WHEN in the eighteenth century there appeared the doctrine that man fallen from his high estate, and sophisticated through long acquaintance with the ages, must return to his primitive simplicity and regain his plain and virtuous ways, a theory more easily advanced than proved was hailed with pleasure by many that did not stop to think that any absurdity can be solemnly stated, provided that certain forms are followed. That an absurdity can be solemnly stated and rapturously acclaimed as a millennium formula, is generally made possible by the short sight and imperfect moral instinct of those that have batted on their own prosperity or ease of economy until they have lost the faculty of judging relations, the ability to reckon what part their own happiness plays toward that of others. Their oversight must always be paid for, often by the succeeding question that must remedy the errors of the preceding, but that, nevertheless, in no way justifies the unnatural importance that some have given to nature, either in political systems or in the ordinary habits of living. Nature is no doubt very fine, but first we must determine whether to write it with the capital letter or the small and when that is done, one must fix within some limits what the word means.

In the eighteenth century, when the historical method had not been developed, save as it was tentatively followed here and there in the writings of a few, the "state of nature," "the natural man," the simplicity and virtues of humanity when it wore wolf skins and used flint plow what he thinks of the natural man that he has seen in New Guinea or the Polynesian group and his answer will not encourage the eighteenth and twentieth century theory of spontaneous perfection.

This bias toward the natural man as a sound working theory shows itself in a good many directions, in questions of politics especially and in questions of economy where it touches education; a mysterious excellence is supposed to exist in the absence of certain things, education, for example. Writers that ought to remember the weight attached by some to their words, have intimated that the educated man is lacking in some qualities necessary to the commonwealth. Opinions like this are apt to be uttered by two kinds of writers, those that have little education and those that have a great deal. Of these last we speak. When a highly educated man of great reading says that the educated man in general is not of as much use or ability as the uneducated, he is apt to be very misleading. His opinion, as a matter of fact, is intended for other highly educated men, who have explored the upper tiers of shelves and with him have found that there is a good deal of rubbish on them.

He speaks, too, with the modesty of great requirements; he has found that knowledge without anything else is decidedly not power but so much paint laid coat after coat upon a man's usefulness, a faculty that must be aroused by something more than printer's ink alone. He has seen that even though one may read Plato trippingly that by no means insures that one understands him, much less has any tint of originality. He is quite willing to admit that a Middle English authority may not be able to drive a good bargain. All this may easily be true, but if you ask this man whether he would dispense with what we call education, you will get nearer to what he means, but it will not be what men thought it was.

It must be remembered that the sum of our information about any type approaching this "natural man" shows that he is merely the undeveloped man, the man that still thinks on his hands and knees. Development in every range of human attributes is man's destiny, and when they seek to deny him this revelation of his immortality, the anarchist

NEWSPAPER DISTRIBUTED AT BALTIMORE THROUGH DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION

Tent from which the Monitor was distributed in Baltimore visited by many, including delegates to national convention and the stiff worshipper of the past join hands. By all means let us keep clear the sunlight and luxuriate in nature, the nature of the splendor that is spread over all the earth, the nature that soothes and cheers with its gentle marvels and awes us to remind us of our heritage. Yet after all, man comes first and perhaps it is better for us that save in the speculations of those that have had to cobble theory with fact, we have had few dealings with "the natural man."

MERCHANTS PLAN CITY TERMINAL

SAN JOSE, Cal.—Committees were named recently by several local civic organizations which have joined in a plan to make San Jose a railroad terminal by procuring a port of entry at deep water on the South San Francisco bay by annexing a narrow strip of territory eight miles long between this city and Alviso. Threatened withdrawal of terminal railroad rates, which this city has enjoyed for several years, has caused the action. San Jose shippers are agitating the terminal rates, claiming that the action will be disastrous to business interests.

WHILE the Democratic national convention was being held in Baltimore, Md., the Monitor and other literature were distributed upon request at a tent erected by the Christian Science distributing committee about two blocks from the convention hall and facing one of the railroad stations. There were several persons engaged in the work of distribution throughout the day and evening, other members of the churches assisting the committee.

A sign 10 feet long—"The Christian Science Monitor, the clean daily newspaper, free today"—drew the attention of thousands of passers-by and 2000 monitors were given out as they were asked for by the recipients. Many delegates to the convention were among the newspaper visitors. Copies of the newspaper were sent to the rooms of each member of the Massachusetts delegation, and to the leading hotels.

the action. San Jose shippers are agitating the terminal rates, claiming that the action will be disastrous to business interests.

WASTE IN TIMBER CUTTING EVIDENT

SACRAMENTO, Cal.—A report to State Forester Homans by a field party working in Shasta county, in the vicinity of Round mound, states that the timber cutting methods employed by the lumber companies there are wasteful. Out of 17,000 acres examined to date, 7000 acres had been cut over carelessly. No clearing work is done, which might make it possible to reforest, the chief forester states. Only the least valuable timber was left standing and any new growth will be of this class.

BOND ISSUE ELECTION

JACKSON, Miss.—The promoters of the Memphis, Columbus & Gulf railroad state that indications are that the city of Columbus will undoubtedly vote bonds on Aug. 15 in the sum of $50,000 to aid the building of the road. The city of Aberdeen has already done so and the thriving little city of Okolona, in Chickasaw county, has voted an issue.

FOREIGN TRADE BUREAU PLANNED

SAN FRANCISCO—A department of foreign trade for the assistance of merchants of other countries and the dissemination of information regarding the advantages of the port of San Francisco, will be established by the Chamber of Commerce as the result of a meeting held of directors of the chamber. The department will be under the direction of the foreign trade committee of the chamber, of which Capt. Robert Dollar is chairman and John H. Rosseter vice chairman.

Much of the work will be connected with publicity, but the department will also gather and tabulate for the benefit of individuals and firms interested in the export trade information of interest and value, which will be made available in the form of confidential bulletins.

SCHOOL SUPPORT TO COST $283,081

SAN DIEGO, Cal.—From estimates compiled by Hugh J. Baldwin, county superintendent of schools, the total sum necessary to run the schools of San Diego county during the coming school year will be $283,081.70. Of this amount more than half will come from the state.

While there are 126 school districts in the county the city of San Diego will draw nearly half of the money apportioned for all the schools of the county—$135,320 to be exact. These sums are merely for the conduct of the schools.

AUSTRALIA WILL SEND STUDENTS

BERKELEY, Cal.—The state of Victoria, Australia, has established two permanent scholarships at the University of California, and two young men will arrive shortly to complete their training in irrigation engineering, which ranks as one of the most important professions in the Antipodes at present.

TURKISH GENERAL REFUSES ORDER TO FIGHT MONTENEGRINS

(By the United Press)

VIENNA, Austria—Ordered by the Sultan to march against the Montenegrins, the commander of the Turkish troops at Salonika today refused to do so, according to a telegram from Constantinople. He explained that in view of the soldiers' present state such action would be dangerous.

Snubbed by King Nicholas when he demanded an explanation of Montenegrin aggression in Albania, the Turkish minister at Cetinje prepared today to leave for Constantinople. The 24-hour period allowed by Turkey for a satisfactory response from Montenegro concerning recent frontier incidents elapsed with only an evasive reply.

The Austrian and Italian ministers at Cetinje are trying to prevent Turkish-Montenegrin hostilities, but it is believed that Russia is encouraging King Nicholas to force the Sultan's hand. A declaration of hostilities is looked for immediately following the present diplomatic break.

The Montenegrin troops who drove back the Turkish advance across the frontier still occupy Turkish territory.

(By the United Press)

CONSTANTINOPLE—The Sultan's guard was doubled today. Foreigners are also said to be in danger. Publication of unfavorable news was suppressed but the populace knew of the latest Italian victory, of the rebel successes in Albania and that Montenegrins occupied Turkish soil. It was also rumored that Bulgaria was about to invade Macedonia.

NEW YORK—Despatches from Rome to the New York Herald state that the Montenegrin government has not yet replied to the Turkish ultimatum demanding the withdrawal of Montenegrin troops from Turkish territory.

The Montenegrin government is awaiting a report from General Muckotich, who has been sent to the place where a pitched battle was recently fought between 1000 Turks and an equal number of Montenegrins.

The representatives of the powers at Cetinje are working to prevent a rupture of diplomatic relations between Montenegro and Turkey.

Further details regarding the capture of Zuzara, the last town on the Tripolitan coast hitherto unoccupied by the Italians show that the Turco-Arab forces did not offer much resistance to the march of the Italian troops on the town, their sole object being to permit their main force to retire into Ragadina, 20 kilometers inland.

NEWS BY CABLE AND CORRESPONDENCE

FRENCH ELECTORAL REFORM BILL IS NOW IN SENATE'S HANDS

(Special to the Monitor)
PARIS, France.—At the final sitting of the congress of the Educational League at Geradmer in the Vosges, the premier, Raymond Poincaré, made a speech of some considerable importance.

Speaking of the ministry he said that it had been the proudest moment of his political life when on the formation of the present ministry he had found himself able to draw around him at so critical a time a number of the most prominent leaders of the Republican party and especially the two ex-premiers, M. Briand and Leon Bourgeois, to whom he paid a very high tribute as statesmen.

At last there was unity in the cabinet, the premier said, with regard to the national defense, and all the measures that had been taken for increasing the efficiency both in the army and navy had been put into operation in a manner that was in perfect harmony with the intentions of the government.

Unity Expressed

The same unity prevailed with regard to the fiscal and social measures to be carried through. He referred for instance to the remarkably quick manner in which the 1913 budget had been deposited in the Chamber, and to the fact that they had commenced the discussion thereof at an earlier date than on any previous occasion.

They had already outlined what he considered a practical scheme of fiscal reform—one which while it would not immediately turn upside down the existing system of direct taxation, would yet render impossible the fiscal inquisition of which they had recently heard so much and would moreover put an end to the present heavy injustice of the taxes imposed on the land.

The attitude of the cabinet, the minister said, had also been harmonious in dealing with the workmen's pensions bill, with the bill regulating the hours of labor, with the pensions for miners and with a large scheme for securing cheaper dwellings for the workmen.

Question Is Serious

One of the most serious and at the same time one of the most delicate questions with which they had had to deal was that of electoral reform. This question, he said, was not born yesterday. His eminent friend M. Clemenceau, with whom he had been associated as colleague in the Cabinet of M. Sarrien, and who in his turn had occupied the position of premier, had himself so long ago as Nov. 5, 1906 announced in his inaugural speech the necessity for the reorganization of the administration and for the enlargement of the system of ballot in the legislative elections. This constituted an unquestionable and solemn condemnation by the head of the government of the old system of ballot in the arrondissements: a condemnation which even then seemed inevitable and in the ordinary course of things was borne out.

M. Poincaré said that he did not pretend that the last word had been said on this subject in the Chamber. The Senate would now proceed to study the new bill, but in any event it would not lend itself to a series of futile negotiations nor to mere argument, and the government knew full well that it could count on the patriotism and on the spirit of Republican unity which dominated the members of that body.

STEADY INFLOWING OF SETTLERS MARKED IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA

(Special to the Monitor)

ADELAIDE, S. Aus.—Under the government scheme of assistance to nominated and selected immigrants the population of South Australia is being steadily augmented.

A few weeks ago a contingent of 276 persons arrived by the P. and O. branch service liner Ballarat. Since then the steamer Commonwealth brought 94 new arrivals; and a further 397 persons, who had arrived by the steamer Belgic to improve their lot under the conditions prevailing in the sunny central state of the commonwealth, have also been welcomed. Of the latter number 339, including 23 domestics, are nominated immigrants, the remaining 58 having undertaken the journey without assistance.

A striking tribute to the state is the fact that a large proportion of those who landed from the Belgic were nominated for assisted passages by their relatives who had preceded them, and decided to permanently reside in South Australia.

The current rate of wages for domestics in private employ ranges from 18s. to 20s. per week for cooks, and from 10s. to 16s. per week for housemaids, parlor-maids, and general helpers. The demand for girls is exceedingly keen, and the immigration department is overwhelmed with applications from would-be emigrants.

HYDRO-AEROPLANE FOR BRITISH NAVY HAS TWO ENGINES

(Special to the Monitor)

LONDON.—A new hydro-aeroplane, constructed by Messrs. Short Brothers, has just been taken over by the naval authorities. It is driven by two revolving seven-cylinder Gnome engines, each of 50 horsepower, but if need be it can continue flying with only one motor working. It is capable of carrying four people, with petrol and oil, for seven hours, and when tried recently for speed with both engines working it succeeded in attaining a speed of 62 miles an hour.

All flying wires are doubled, and the factor of safety all round is 10. The machine has an over-all length of 38 feet, and a maximum span of 50 feet, the gap between the two planes being 7 feet. It has the advantage of giving the pilot an exceptionally clear view ahead.

DESERT EXPLORER ENDS NEW WORK

(Special to the Monitor)

LONDON.—W. Harding King, who has for the last few years been engaged in desert exploration with the idea of reclaiming sandy wastes, has returned from another winter's work in the huge tract of desert between Egypt, Tibesti, Darfur and Wadai. These tracts of country, though not far removed from the Egyptian railway, are practically cut off from the world, and are in much the same state as they were in Biblical times.

On one occasion Mr. King heard the "song of the sand," which is supposed to be due to grains of sand contracting after sunset and rubbing together. At evening very faint sounds are heard resembling the singing of telegraph wires, and some Mr. King says, are not unlike the sounds of "Big Ben."

LONDON TO HAVE MOTOR MAIL VANS

(Special to the Monitor)

LONDON.—Seventy improved motor mail vans are being placed on the London streets for the conveyance of letters and parcels, raising the total number of such vans to little short of 100. This, it is stated, will place London ahead of all other capitals as regards both the number and the efficiency of its postal motor vehicles.

Seven years ago the whole of the London postal vans were drawn by horses, but now as much as 50 per cent of the postal vehicular work in London will be carried out by motor traction.

SWANS ON THAMES MARKED, INCLUDING THOSE OF THE KING

(Special to the Monitor)

LONDON.—The swan masters of the Thames started on their annual journey down the Thames toward the end of July. Every swan occupying the long reaches of this river has an owner. Half the birds belong to the King, whilst the Vintners and Dyers companies are the owners of the remainder.

The marking ceremony takes place every year, but not until a preliminary voyage has been made to ascertain exactly where the birds are nesting and the number of the many broods of young cygnets setting out for their life upon the waters.

T. R. Abnett is the King's swan master. Mr. Turk of Cookham being swan herd for the Vintners and Dyers. Each on the long voyage down the stream was attended by assistants. In and out of every backwater and tributary they go, until an extensive search from Southwark bridge to Henley has been made and every cygnet marked with a seal which denotes his owner.

The King's birds bear an impress in the form of a diamond outlined on the beak, the Vintners a downward curve, and the Dyers the same curve with the addition of four perpendicular lines alongside. About 600 swans were marked and registered, the process engaging six entire days. The number of birds on the waters of the Thames has declined from 900, which they had arrived at a few years ago.

TRAINING SHIP IN ITS JUBILEE YEAR

(Special to the Monitor)

LONDON.—Lord Brassey distributed the prizes to the cadets on board the Worcester training ship in the Thames, off Greenwich, Kent. Sir Thomas Sutherland, chairman of the P. & O. company, remarked that this was the jubilee year of the Worcester, and that since its establishment in 1861 3550 cadets had passed through its training methods.

The gold medal given by the King for "the boy who shows the qualities likely to make the finest sailor" was presented to Cadet Geoffrey Gordon Kitchen, Cadet A. G. Shields, who was second in merit, taking the gold watch given by the P. & O. Company.

BRITAIN'S NAVAL POLICY IS TOLD IN WINSTON CHURCHILL'S SPEECH

(Special to the Monitor)

WESTMINSTER.—There is no question that Winston Churchill's speech on the naval estimates was a momentous pronouncement. For months past the hopes of all that are in two great empires has oscillated between optimism and pessimism. Mr. Churchill's speech, seemed at first sight, to tilt the beam to the very limit of depression. When it is considered, however, in connection with all the facts of the case, there is no need to regard this depression as anything but a temporary indication of the political need.

At the time the recent German naval law was first promulgated, Mr. Churchill indicated that on certain eventualities in that naval law depended the corresponding eventualities in the building program of the United Kingdom. This was before the visit of Lord Haldane to Berlin, and consequently before Baron Marschall von Bieberstein became ambassador at the court of St. James. It was scarcely possible that German naval authorities should slacken the operation of the naval law, and this being so it was inevitable that a corresponding increase should take place in the estimates of the United Kingdom.

It is true that this fact commits the two empires to a building program of colossal extravagance, but if at some period the German foreign office and the British foreign office should arrive at a better understanding the admiralties of both of them will be able to reconsider their decisions.

Foreign Politics Blamed

This fact makes it more and more plain that the shipbuilding programs of nations are dependent less upon the views of the admiralties than upon the exigencies of the foreign offices. The real place to reduce naval expenditure to its proper level is at the root of the situation, and that is the foreign politics of the nation.

Only quite recently it was said confidently in The Christian Science Monitor that at the end of a decent interval the ships drawn from the Mediterranean would return to it. This prognostication has received official confirmation from no less a person than the first lord. It was manifestly ridiculous that the full strength of the British fleet should be concentrated in the North sea, and that a new squadron should be laid down to meet the possibilities of a problematical coalition of Austria and Italy against the United Kingdom. There is no power in the world capable of maintaining a navy superior to every conceivable combination, and it is well that it is so.

The really disquieting element in Mr. Churchill's speech, if it is to be called disquieting, was the declaration of Germany's determination to keep four fifths of her fleet in a perpetual state of preparation, a development unforeseen in the naval bill which had forced the United Kingdom to a similar decision. After all, however, it has always been the policy of the German empire to keep its naval and military arms in a state of thorough preparedness. It is rather the United Kingdom which has waited for a declaration of war in order to become anything like approaching ready.

Decision Forces Hand

It is no doubt the case that the decision of the German admiralty has forced the hand of the admiralty in London in this respect, but it is not the German admiralty but the German foreign office in whose hands the foreign destinies of the country lie, and if the relationship between the Wilhelmstrasse and Downing street can be maintained on a cordial basis the heads of the admiralties and war offices will be forced in the nature of events to gradually disarm.

What those who are interested in European politics do not always grasp is something that has been repeatedly commented on in The Christian Science Monitor, and that is that the so-called peace treaties, the various ententes, have proved, as some of the deepest political thinkers always declared they would prove, two-edged weapons.

The entente with France was meant to allay bellicose feelings which grew out of Egypt and Fashoda; from that point of view it has been brilliantly successful. Beginning, however, with the simple entente between London and Paris it has grown into a sort of unwritten treaty of alliance, which nearly became something more than a treaty of alliance at the moment of the Agadir incident. It is absolutely impossible to ignore this fact, and the statesmen in the Wilhelmstrasse find themselves suddenly faced not only by the fleet of the United Kingdom with all its potential possibilities, but by a France resting on the moral support of this fleet, which has become a very different France from the France of the later Bismarckian and the Caprivian regimes.

Russia Looming Up

Then, again, the entente with Russia has had a very similar effect. The entente with Russia has set up a triple entente as a sort of counterpoise to the triple alliance. If this were all it might not amount to much, but Russia having recovered from the worst effects of the debacle in the far east, under the shelter of this entente is already in the picturesque phrase of the political publicist, "entering upon the orbit of Berlin."

In a word the ententes which brought about amicable relations between London and Paris, and glossed over the outstanding difficulties between London and St. Petersburg, have meant at least a covert possibility of disaster to Berlin and Vienna. The German who remembers the incident of Agadir is not in the least likely to regard the dual entente as a mere reconciliation over the bad blood of Fashoda.

When, therefore, Mr. Churchill speaks to the House of Commons of the dangerous possibilities of the German naval laws, it should be remembered that there are two sides to every question, and that the German, not unnaturally, sees the side which to the Englishman, fully conscious of pacific intentions, is cast entirely into the shade. Of course, the same thing is repeated the other way about.

The German naturally ambitious for his place in the sun, has become, little by little, wrought up to a state of political exasperation by what he regards as the way in which his natural aspirations have been thwarted by the building up of an alliance, all the more dangerous perhaps, because it professes to be only an entente. His fears have probably carried him further than the fears of the inhabitants of the United Kingdom, because so far the latter have had the services of the fleet which they believed to be invincible.

Dreadnought Mistake

It was perhaps the building of the first dreadnought that sounded the tocsin of the real struggle over armaments. Up to that time the United Kingdom had enjoyed a naval supremacy which no one had questioned. With the building of the first dreadnought there came, so to speak, the laying down of a new fleet, and the chorus of congratulation which accompanied the launch of that vessel was not likely to take the sound of the bells of peace upon the continent.

Naval men all the world over, cast their eyes over the ironclad fleets and began to consign them to the scrap heap, and with that there came a passion for building. If the pre-dreadnought ships were really to be regarded as scrap iron, then in the race for naval supremacy all nations started suddenly equal, and Germany had an opportunity not likely to occur again, possibly within a century, of building a fleet which would place her in the position which she believed to be her due.

GERMAN WORKERS VISITING ENGLAND ARE ENTERTAINED

(Special to the Monitor)

LONDON.—Some 60 members of the German Workers Educational Association arrived in England recently with a view to becoming better acquainted with English family life and to obtaining a wider knowledge of the country. The visitors were entertained at a luncheon at the House of Commons one day by Arnold Rowntree, M. P., a number of other M. P.'s being also present.

In the course of a short speech, Mr. Rowntree mentioned the naval rivalry between Germany and Britain, and the race as to which power would be able to build the most dreadnoughts. He declared that if statesmen, chancellors, and the governing class were unable to stop the barbarous expenditure of armaments, the people could and will do so.

He further maintained that nothing would tend more to remove misunderstandings than the interchange of opinions and visits between the two nations, and, quoting from Goethe, he said: "We only really live when we delight in the good will of others." That statement, he declared, is as true of nations as of individuals.

BURIED TREASURE FOUND IN POLTAVA, RUSSIA, IS ANCIENT

(Special to the Monitor)

ST. PETERSBURG, Russia.—A discovery of buried treasure has been made in the village of Malaia Pereschepina, in the government of Poltava, Russia. The discovery was made by some farm laborers, who, while digging in a field, discovered an old chest containing gold and silver coins and vessels.

The coins date back to the fourth century, but the most valuable article is a large silver dish damascened in gold. It bears a Latin inscription showing that it belonged to a bishop of the seventh century. There were besides gold and silver Persian cups, 450 gold and 50 silver coins, bracelets and other ornaments. The collection is valued at about £100,000.

NAVAL QUESTION BEING WATCHED IN NEW ZEALAND

(Special to the Monitor)

WELLINGTON, New Zealand.—The debate on the navy in the House of Commons has attracted considerable attention in the dominion. The opinion is even expressed that New Zealand has not done sufficient in merely presenting a Dreadnought. It is argued that although the undivided control of the imperial navy is essential, provision should be made for the maintenance of local units, and it is hoped that the appeal made by Mr. Churchill will not have been in vain.

LEGION OF HONOR IS CONFERRED ON PRINCE OF WALES

(Special to the Monitor)

PARIS, France.—Shortly before his departure the Prince of Wales was entertained at luncheon at the Elysee by the President of the republic, among those present being M. Poincaré, the Premier, and M. Millerand, the minister of war. After luncheon was over President Fallières decorated his royal highness with the grand cross of the Legion of Honor, and in thanking the President for the distinction conferred on him the prince referred to the pleasure he had derived from his stay in France.

SWEDISH CAVALRY HOLD MANY PRIZES GAINED FOR JUMPING

(Special to the Monitor)

STOCKHOLM, Sweden.—The prize-giving for horse jumping at the stadium by King Gustav practically marked the close of the Olympic games. The stadium was crowded and in the royal box were the King and Queen, the crown princess, Prince Carl and Prince Eugen, the King's brothers.

The jumping engaged in by French, Swedish, German, American, and Belgian officers resulted in the first prize being won by the Swedes. At the end of the afternoon a dais was erected in front of the royal box on which the trophies given by the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of Germany, the King of Italy, and Count Audrassy, as well as the Swedish cavalry challenge cup were placed.

King Gustav accompanied by the royal princes and attended by numerous Swedish officers took his place on the dais, and presented laurel wreaths and prizes to the officers who, having had their names and qualifications read out, rode past the dais. The first officers to receive prizes were Swedes, and they received an ovation.

The next in order of merit were the Germans with whom the King shook hands as he did with several other foreign officers. The prizes given by the Emperor of Germany, the Emperor of Austria, the King of Italy, as well as the Swedish cavalry challenge cup are now held by the Swedish cavalry regiments; the Count Audrassy prize has passed to France. The Swedish officers to receive first prizes were Lieutenant Nordlander, Loewenhaupt, Kasperon and Kilman, Count Horn of Eminne and Commander Edlererentz.

RULERS OF RUSSIA AND SWEDEN MEET

(Special to the Monitor)

ST. PETERSBURG, Russia.—The meeting of the Czar of Russia with the King of Sweden took place in the harbor of Standart, the Emperor's favorite summer station in Finnish waters. The King, who was accompanied by the Queen and his ministers, arrived on board the battleship Oscar II., and the ministers of the Czar were also present at the meeting of the two rulers.

Referring to the latter the Novo Vremya says that the visit of the Swedish sovereign serves to show that the efforts which have been made in the German press to set Sweden against Russia have failed to produce any effect upon responsible statesmen in Sweden.

ASSOCIATION AIDING POULTRY KEEPERS IS PRAISED FOR WORK

(Special to the Monitor)

LONDON.—The International Association of Poultry Instructors and Investigators, comprising delegates from the United States, Canada, India and this continent, met recently at the rooms of the Royal Agricultural Society in Bedford square.

The parliamentary secretary of the board of agriculture, Lord Lucas, said that as a result of the reorganization now taking place, and thanks to the assistance of the development commission, it was hoped that in the course of the next few years they would be able to see that poultry keeping on the most approved lines would be taught all over the country.

Small farms on which poultry is kept were, he said, a matter of great importance, and they wished to place at a man's disposal every opportunity for learning how to cultivate poultry on the most approved and scientific lines. In apologizing for Mr. Runciman's absence, he said that he was engaged in a piece of work which practically meant the remodeling of the whole system of agricultural education in England, in which a prominent place was to be given to poultry teaching.

Lord Middleton, president of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, said that every one connected with agriculture recognized the importance of the poultry industry, and the formation of that association for the exchange of knowledge was important and he could promise the support of the Royal Agricultural Society.

Edward Brown, F. L. S., who was elected first president, described poultry raising as the Cinderella of agriculture. Consumers, he said, had increased more rapidly than producers and unless the balance was reduced in one way or another, mainly by greater production, the ultimate result of insufficient food supply would become a pressing problem. The object before them was not to establish an association of poultry producers, not to add another society to the multitudes already in being, and not to promote the interest of any group, but they had assembled to lay the foundations of a great world influence.

HON. C. J. SMYTHE EULOGIZES SHOW

(Special to the Monitor)

PIETERMARITZBURG, S. Africa.—At the annual show at the Royal Agricultural Society at Pietermaritzburg, S. A., the administrator, the Hon. C. J. Smythe, said that if the society continued the improvements it was making it would soon have one of the best equipped show yards in the Union. Horses formed the main features of the show and there were also excellent displays of melons, agricultural implements and of produce generally. Poultry made also an excellent show and the sheep are better than last year, especially the merinos.

PREPOSITION VERSUS CONJUNCTION

MANY have spoken to the question whether "all but I" or "all but me" is the right locution, and that Fielding at least was averse to this bothering little monosyllable is plain, for he makes somebody implore, "But me no buts." The upholders of the opposite sides of the argument, however, continue to butt each other with a happy zest. One is excused for taking the subject lightly—though one must say "the object," if one stands for the explanation, that "but" in such cases is a preposition rightly governing the objective case.

Many sage folk evade the tangle by saying that the prepositional use of but is closely enmeshed with its conjunctive use. Those who feel that "all but me" is the thing have eminent authorities on their side, and Prof. C. P. Mason, recording this use of the word, also grants the rights of the other form by adducing both Chaucer and the Anglo-Saxon.

Professor Mason says that but treated as a conjunction and followed by the nominative is of course an elliptical use. That is, certain words must be supplied before the sentence can be parsed. He finds these missing words in Chaucer, thus: "I saw no man him greve but it were only Oswald." Now one would like to hint that here is perhaps room for doubt whether even Oswald could make "him" greve, and therefore the doubt implied in "but it were" is explained. Likewise a sentence from Bulwer cited by Professor Mason to prove the modern use of this conjunctive but has room for a similar doubt, perhaps. Bulwer says, "Who but I can seal the lips of those below?" Professor Mason says that this means "Who but [it be] I can seal the lips." Perhaps Bulwer wanted this vaguer feeling here, implying doubt whether even the speaker can seal the lips. In the case of the famous line of Mrs. Hemans, however,

"The boy stood on the burning deck Whence all but he had fled," to introduce this softening and hesitant ellipsis is impossible. To say, "Whence all but [it were] he had fled" makes nonsense of the line. Is it not therefore possible that Bartlett by printing this much discussed line thus:

"Whence all but him had fled," has the right of the matter? "All but him" admits of no doubts. Here but is a simple preposition firmly reducing the boy to the objective case and holding him there as the single exception to the general exodus. The poem turns on this point. To leave the thought or the boy up in the air uncertain whether he really did remain or flee, as the elliptical "Whence all but he had fled" would seem to do, simply quashes the whole poem.

Professor Mason cites this conjunctive use of "but he" in Anglo-Saxon as follows: "Ne nis na God buten he. There is not never no God but he." Still this sentence is not likely to reassure those who fight shy of Anglo-Saxon as a model for modern English. Perhaps the mathematics of this triple negative, however, is that as two negatives make an affirmative, a third one swings back to the negative again!

In a sentence recently discussed in the current press, "No one but God and I know," the majority of testimony was that "No one but God and me knows" was the right form. Here again it would appear that the elliptical feeling which "but God and I" introduces is not what the author was after. He was in no doubt or hesitation no delay. He wanted to affirm that no one except God and himself knew. To supply in this case the words offered by Professor Mason, and read "No one but [it were] God and I," weakens the force of this sentence. The other alternative is to read it, "but God and me."

The usage in the King James version of the Bible is not always perfect, as witness, "Whom say ye that I am?"; yet there is an example of this definitive force of but as a preposition in the phrase "Whom have I in heaven but thee?" Logically there is no doubt intended here. The psalmist is certain that he has none but God. If the translators had wished to give the vaguer or delayed sense of things here they must have said "but thou." The words supplied to explain the vague conjunctive use of but in such a case would make the sentence read, "Whom have I in heaven but [it were] thou?" not thee. Therefore in this Scripture the simple use of but as a preposition is clear.

In Mark we read "There is none other but he" and in Deuteronomy "There is none else besides him." There seems no choice here between the words but and besides. They have a like force. The second sentence is indeed the original which is quoted in Mark. If but in Mark were followed by the objective him would it not strengthen the statement? The sentence taken elliptically is weaker, one feels, or at any rate it is vague, less direct and sure. If, as Professor Mason makes plain, "but it were" is the best and perhaps the only explanation of this construction, then the saying in Mark means "There is none other but [it were] he." Here seeking and questioning is implied, while the form in Deuteronomy, "There is none else besides him" is definitive, frank, square. It is better English to say things without reservation and nuance. To say "There is none other but him" settles the question. No mental acrobatics are required to supply missing words, or the "feel" of missing words. One grasps the idea instantly. And for this more authoritative "but him" there is plenty of authority in Professor Mason's book. The question between the two forms then inheres in the meaning which the author wishes to convey—of assured conviction or of possible doubt and artistic indirection.

Browning Plays Acted

It is impossible to speak with judgment of the merits of Browning as a dramatist without having seen his plays on the stage, says Prof. W. L. Phelps in the Yale Review. Browning wrote nine plays and eight of them have seen the footlights. In this country three of the plays have been given with a professional cast, and all three were successful beyond anticipation. Mrs. Le Moyne was the chief mover in all three productions. She began her experiment in 1900 with "In a Balcony." In 1905 she gave "A Blot in the Scutcheon." In 1906 she produced "Pippa Passes." "It was the two earlier plays," says Professor Phelps, "that worked my conversion. I used to believe, long after I had come to read Browning with enjoyment, that his plays were utterly unfit for the stage, simply because everybody told me so. But now I suspect that two factors only are necessary for the stage success of his best dramas—intelligence on the stage and intelligence in the audience. People naturally differ as to what they find interesting and what they find dull. But I cannot honestly maintain that Browning is a failure on the stage, for the simple reason that I have seen three of his plays acted by professionals and they were successful. . . . At this moment I can think of not a single English tragedy in verse that has appeared since the Elizabethan theaters were closed in 1642 that is so great as 'In a Balcony' or 'A Blot on the Scutcheon.'"

Miss Julia Marlowe is reported by a correspondent of the New York Post to have played "Colombe's Birthday" several times in her early days.

I could not love thee, dear, so much,
Loved I not honor more.

—Richard Lovelace. (1650.)

FARMING ON LONDON'S VACANT LAND

THE London Vacant Land Cultivation Society, which has just issued its fourth annual report, was founded with the idea of helping needy working men and women by letting out to them, rent free, pieces of vacant land obtained on loan from the owners. Some 14,000 acres of unused land are said to exist within the metropolitan area, but of these 60 only are being worked by the society. Upon these 60 acres 300 men and women have plots under cultivation, so that, including families of plot holders, 2500 persons are deriving benefit from the operations of the society. Additional applications to the number of 470 have been received, but in order to extend its operations the society needs larger funds than it commands at present.

The gross retail value of the produce raised by the men already exceeds £6500 and it has been found that for every £1 spent by the society the plot holders have £5 worth of useful vegetables. The benefits, however, are by no means of a purely material nature, for the habits of self-help, self-reliance, patience and perseverance which have been brought out cannot be valued in terms of pounds, shillings and pence. Much of the land was extremely unfavorable, so bad in fact that worse could hardly be found, yet even in these discouraging circumstances good crops have been obtained. This is said to have been largely due to two important things, namely, the constant and practical nature of the supervision provided, and the fact that constant surface cultivation has always been insisted on. In the exceptionally dry summer of 1911 it was found that, in cases where water supplies were not obtainable, this repeated stirring of the surface of the ground proved remarkably successful and was, actually the only means of saving the crops.

The year to which the report refers was marked by two new moves. In the first place, many of the plot holders recognizing the benefits they had received and the inadequacy of the support accorded by the public, expressed a wish that some arrangements could be made by which they might contribute regularly to the funds of the society. It is therefore proposed that a charge should be made of 2s. 6d. per plot for the first year, rising by the same amount each year to 10s. in the fourth year. This would tend to make the help received less of a charity than at present and should extend the operations of the society. It is also proposed to set aside a piece of land in each place where ground is held by the society to form an experimental and instructional garden for the children of plot holders.

One result of the work of the society is found in the desire of some of the men to quit town life and take up the cultivation of the soil as a means of livelihood. The need of repopulating the agricultural districts is a pressing one at the present time, and there is no doubt that the instruction imparted to the children of plot holders under the new arrangement will not be without its influence in preparing the ground for the movement "back to the land" during the course of the coming generation. The offices of the society are at 39 Wilson street, London, E. C.

BELLS OF ST. MARK WELCOME

UNDER ST. MARK'S BELLS, VENICE

THE breaking of the long siege of St. Mark's bells in the Campanile at Venice has been welcomed by Venetians with almost passionate delight, and the beauty of their tones is certainly marvelous. For years these bells have been silent, for when the deterioration of the structure of the great tower was observed they were not rung lest their vibration should injure it still further. In the great crash the smaller bells were broken, but in the recasting seem to have lost none of their mellow beauty. When the unwonted peals ring out now the Venetian pauses in his work and voices are hushed to listen; the gondolier rests his oar and the passer-by stands still. One man, long a resident of the city, goes twice a day to the base of the Campanile and there, leaning against it, awaits the joy of the daily ringing. In the music of it he no doubt finds consolation for the impermanent intrusion of steam and motor craft on his formerly silent lagoon, for when the bells are ringing all vulgar noises sink into silence.

Classic Study Praised

It became clear to me that stowed away in memory somewhere there had been, from my school days onward, words in plenty, and ideas enough for my purposes. What I really lacked was practice, conversationally and with the pen, in the use of them. Not only was my vocabulary sufficient, but in thinking it over later I discovered and followed to its source the method by which I acquired this vocabulary, says a writer in the Atlantic.

In presenting an argument, stating a case or pleading a cause, other things being equal, I always attributed my intellectual advantage to the fact that in my youth I had received a thorough drilling in Latin and Greek, while my companions, as a rule, in my line of life, had not. As a simple practical equipment for life's journey, what may be called my classical foundation seems to me now to be worth all the other features of my school education put together.

There is no road to success but through a clear, strong purpose—nothing can take its place. A purpose underlies character, culture, position, attainment of every sort.—T. T. Munger.

"Noctes Ambrosianae"

Prof. John Wilson of Edinburgh, the leading worker on Blackwoods Magazine between 1825-1835, published therein his "Noctes Ambrosianae," in which Christopher North and Timothy Tiekler, with James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, author of "Kilmory," and other beautiful poems, were supposed to meet at Ambrose's hotel, and discuss men and events until well into "the wee sma' hours." Wilson was the literary giant of his time; and country, and Hogg a man of undoubted genius; and although how much of what is ascribed to him was really his own can never be settled, he undoubtedly was a genius, and filled with the poetry that has always underlain the more sordid traits of the Highland peasantry.—National Magazine.

WASHINGTON AND AVIATION

WHEN Blanchard, the French balloonist, came to America to exhibit his prowess in this country he was received at Philadelphia by President Washington with great courtesy. Following is a copy of the passport provided for him, of which he made speedy use, since he could speak no English and after an hour landed in a field in New Jersey where the farmers were bewildered by his sudden appearance out of the sky, till his passport explained him. This paper is reprinted in St. Nicholas.

"George Washington, President of the United States of America, To All to Whom These Presents shall come.

"The bearer hereof, Mr. Blanchard, a citizen of France, proposing to ascend in a balloon from the city of Philadelphia, at 10 o'clock a. m. this day, to pass in such direction and to descend in such place as circumstances may render most convenient.

"These are therefore to recommend to all citizens of the United States, and others, that in his passage, descent, return, or journeying elsewhere, they oppose no hindrance or molestation to the said Mr. Blanchard; and that on the contrary, they receive and aid him with that humanity and good will which may render honor to their country, and justice to an individual so distinguished by his efforts to establish and advance art, in order to make it useful to mankind in general.

"Given under my hand and seal, at the city of Philadelphia, this ninth day of January, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-three, and of the independence of America the seventeenth."
(Signed) "GEORGE WASHINGTON."

Curious Broadides

Among the most interesting exhibits at the International Association of Antiquarian Booksellers' exhibition held recently in London were the curious broadsides on which were issued royal proclamations and appeals. One of these printed in 1660 proclaimed that two books written by John Milton and containing "sundry treasonable passages against Us and Our Government" should be publicly burnt. Another broadside dated from 1673 referred to the conduct of audiences in the London theaters. "Divers persons," it read, "do rudely press and with their language and blows force their way into our theaters without paying the price established." The proclamation went on to forbid any person to stand or to sit on the stage or come within any part of the scenes, as "tis impossible to command those vast engines which move the scenes and machines, if any but those who belong thereto be suffered to press in amongst them."

INALIENABLE RIGHTS

WRITTEN FOR THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

HERE are certain so-called "inalienable rights" to which every man is born, and which, though circumstances or environment may not apparently permit him to assert his title openly, he should never lose sight of. That immortal declaration which concedes to the humblest as well as the most exalted citizen his God-given rights of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," is not lightly to be set aside, since it is but a restatement of that divine law enunciated nineteen centuries ago: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free,"—know that you are "free born," and declare your freedom.

Christian Science further declares that this God-endowed man, in the exercise of these rights, "is properly self-governed only when he is guided rightly and governed by his Maker, divine Truth and Love" (Science and Health, p. 106); in other words, he who is obedient to the law of God is entitled to the fullest exercise of these rights. There is therefore something wrong, and which calls for remedy, when one who is striving to walk in conformity to divine law finds himself debarred in any way from his heritage.

Suppose, however, one has nothing to complain of in this respect so far as the outside world is concerned, but within the sacred precincts of home is subjected to a selfish and unreasoning tyranny. How far is one justified in yielding to this rule—a despotic assumption which demands and secures the gratification of its own desires, no matter at what cost to the comfort and well-being of others? Shall the situation be accepted, endured with long-suffering, or the error be quietly but firmly rebuffed?

It happens sometimes, that, halting between two opinions and choosing what seems the lesser evil, one's own right to peace and happiness is ignored, and this petty tyranny is submitted to because of an underlying fear or timidity of what might be the result of revolt against this self-constituted rule. It may be that a man or a woman yields an obedience that is humiliating in the loss of self-respect it entails, simply through fear of a possible display of temper or a wasp-like retaliation that spares neither friend nor foe as long as its spite finds vent. Again, one may be honestly trying to live the Golden Rule, to be obedient to the precept to return good for evil, and however unreasonable the demands upon his patience, is meeting them always in love. How long is one called upon to pursue this course, when the only result, seemingly, is an increase of selfish exactions? Must one's individuality be always submerged?

There comes to thought the Master's answer to eager, impulsive Peter's question: "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him?" No doubt Peter thought he was doing the generous thing when he tentatively asked "Till seven times?" But quickly came the answer, "I say unto thee, Until seven times: but, until seventy times seven." This was one of the Master's "hard sayings" which sometimes puzzled even his disciples, but the parable that followed made its meaning clear. The servant whose debt his lord forgave went at once and took vengeance on a fellow servant who owed him; in other words, he failed to express the compassion with which he himself had been treated. But the day of reckoning came, when his own debt had to be paid to the uttermost farthing.

We are to forgive, then, even as we would be forgiven. We must do our part, that for which we will personally be held responsible. If this duty be shirked, there is the inevitable reckoning to be faced, sooner or later. Surely we dare not ask God to forgive our trespasses against His law, if we are unwilling to concede as much to our brother. But have we done our whole duty by that brother even then? If, for the sake of so-called peace we give way, allow him to continue in his evil course unwarned and unrebuked, have we been true to our own highest sense of right? Are we not in a sense doing evil in the vain hope that good may come? In our very submission are we not paltering our birthright for a false peace and thereby wronging ourselves as well as him whom we should be aiding to recover himself "out of the snare of the devil"?

It is the same old serpent in another guise that holds us back—the skulking coward that is ever seeking to disarm us—fear! We dare not rebuke our brother for his fault, for fear of results; and thus we concede to evil the only power it ever has, because we have failed to declare the omnipotence of good, the all-power of Truth and Love, to whom alone we owe allegiance. Forgetting that nothing can deprive us of our God-given rights, we shrink from the shafts of ridicule, humiliation, and hatred that we fear would be launched were we to venture to assert those rights. We hesitate, instead of availing ourselves of "the panoply of Love" (Science and Health, p. 371), clad in which the wearer is safe from every attack of evil. Therein lies our unfeeling defense. We are to rebuke in love, lay bare the faults that like "little foxes" are destroying the tender vines of grace and sweetness which should make home literally a heaven on earth—as it would be if the reign of good were alone known and acknowledged. It takes courage, nevertheless, and patience and discretion, to bring about this result, and sometimes it seems as though the more dearly we love the offender the harder it is to face his displeasure. But we are forfeiting our right to self-government if we cannot trust Truth and Love to guide us aright and give the victory.

When through reliance on Truth we have come to know with the apostle that we "can do all things through Christ," and have cast out the fear, pride, anger, and impatience that hinder us from seeing the mote in our brother's eye, then we shall be led to speak the "word in season," the loving rebuke that in the spirit of the Master lays bare the fault, that its nothingness may be seen, the fault destroyed, and the vision of unloveliness give place to that of one "sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind."

Anent Ibsen

Some one writing recently of Ibsen's plays for the North American Review gives an opinion as to why his works have not had the wide popularity which his dramatic and poetic abilities would seem to deserve. This writer says that Ibsen puts in a plea for the individual's right to work out his own destiny regardless of others. This is a doctrine which will never make popular plays. The mass of the people recognize the fallacy. That which is personal is never truly great; that which is universal is always so. The man who works out his own destiny by helping others on is not an individualist in this sense. Here, this writer thinks, is where Ibsen's work fails of the universal appeal, falls short of true greatness for all his deep moral earnestness and literary power.

So sinks the daystar in the ocean bed
And yet anon repairs his drooping head
And tricks his beams and with new swiftness
Spangles the ore
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky.

Intelligence of Fishes

Mr. Oxner of the Oceanographical museum at Monaco has tested the intelligence of fishes by a series of interesting experiments. One of these consisted in fishing in a tank daily with a line to which he had fastened, about two inches above the well-baited hook, a piece of red paper. For the first week the fish, which was of the kind called Coris julis, paid no attention to the line; on the eighth, ninth, tenth and eleventh days it took the bait and was hooked; on the twelfth it refused the bait till the red paper was removed, when it was again hooked. On the next three days the red paper was kept on the line, and although the fish examined the bait carefully, it did not touch it. On the sixteenth day and on the following six days it was seen snapping at the red paper, and afterward turning to the hook and slowly and cautiously biting off the bait in small pieces. Mr. Oxner says that the fish gradually learned to look upon the red paper as a warning signal that it could defy safely only when it used great care.—Youths Companion.

The stride of an ostrich when feeding is from 20 to 22 inches; when walking but not feeding, 20 inches; and when exerting himself, it covers his stride covers 11½ to 14 feet, at a rate of 25 miles an hour.

Knots for Boy Scouts

Boy scouts must know, among other things, how to tie at least eight standard knots. The bulletin service of the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell has published an article on "Knots, Hitches and Splices," which is being sent to all the scout masters in New York state, while the leaders of the Boy Scouts of America have received permission to have it printed in full for use of the scout masters and boy scouts throughout the country. In a thousand ways and times a knowledge of rope and knots is useful and many times necessary.

Today's Puzzle

The answer to this enigma is a quotation from Daniel Webster, consisting of 35 letters. 14, 9, 21, 31, 24, 30 is a hero who lived on an island; 26, 7, 19, 5, 34, is an odorous vegetable; 2, 11, 20, 28 is a musical sign; 4, 15, 33, 12 is a piece of money; 17, 32, 6, 29, 13, 25, 8, is found in schools; 18, 1, 10, is for a child.

Mr. Roosevelt's Appeal

THE first sentence of Theodore Roosevelt's address to the first national convention of the National Progressive party is prophetic of the later message. It is addressed to women as well as to men; it assumes to be a call for a "people's party of the whole Union." That is, it aspires to transcend distinctions of sex, caste and section, which it is claimed now exist on sufferance of the historic parties that now are "husks" divided on artificial lines, boss-ridden and privilege controlled, with platforms that contain not "the slightest promise of approaching the great problems of today either with understanding or good faith." The nation now has "government of the needy many by the professional politicians in the interest of the few"; in short, class government of a "peculiarly unwholesome kind." Therefore the need of a party standing for presidential primaries, direct election of senators, the short ballot, courts that in the last analysis are subject to and not above the people, legislation that will put an end to waste of human resources in industry, that will investigate the demand for a minimum wage and secure a living wage, that will conserve normal home life, that will declare equality of rights in politics between men and women.

In his usual literary style Mr. Roosevelt points out that trusts must be controlled, not strangled or divided and set about existing under a mock form of competition. No twilight zone between nation and states can be permitted to become the safe retreat of great aggregations of capital, nor is it possible to meet the issue of discipline by a succession of lawsuits. Given a national industrial commission, similar in scope and power to the one that now controls interstate commerce, and then, by a combination of administrative and judicial authority, inevitable combination can be controlled for social ends. The nation is committed to a "protective tariff," but it should be "established primarily in the interest of the wage-worker and consumer"; be based on the investigations of an expert non-partisan commission; and revised, schedule by schedule, as occasion demands. Everything possible to diminish cost of living should be done. Conservation of natural resource must wax rather than wane. A currency system free from self-interested control and truly national in method and control must be worked out.

The former President repeatedly refers to Germany as a model for America. He has outlined a program indicating acquaintance with and acceptance of ways and means for adjusting social inequalities such as would be outlined by any gathering of social settlement workers and academic sociologists; and the presence of conspicuous members of this group as delegates in the present Chicago convention indicates that on this account Mr. Roosevelt and the rest will get an influential following.

Undermining Merit Service

WE BELIEVE the present is not the time for retreat from a national civil service substantially based on merit. Such a course would be a surrender of a permanent beneficial political ideal and method, and with increase of governmental agents carrying out new policies of federal control there is corresponding need of steadfastness in opposition to the spoils system. That there is to be such multiplication of state agents and of salaries provided by taxpayers we can hardly doubt, in view of the social programs of all the parties seeking control of national affairs. Even the party of Jefferson is no exception.

Vigilance is the price of holding any improvement in governmental theory, however excellent or venerable it may be. The merit system in regnancy at Washington is not as old in point of years as it is sound in administrative theory. Its foes are in all parties, among men who think society owes them a living and an official berth to be won by presenting credentials not necessarily involving possession either of character or clerical efficiency. To talk of reviving the old doctrine "to the victors belong the spoils" at this stage of political unrest and reconstruction, and of lowering the controversy now raging over men and principles to the plane of greed for offices, is to volplane to the lowlands of partizan graft. For that is what the old Jacksonian theory of office-holding amounts to.

The origin of this homily is the clause inserted by the House in the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, which proposes to limit tenure in the civil service to seven years. There should be no limit to the term of an efficient public servant in most of the federal positions. The longer such a post is filled by such a man the more serviceable he becomes. Only with established tenure can experts be trained and retained. On the other hand, no system should be so fixed as to make impossible dismissal of inefficient employees at any time, or their relegation to superannuation with pay when conditions demand it. It is the refusal of Congress to face this last-mentioned phase of the problem fairly that is causing criticism of the service today.

Soaring Price of Beef

A THREE-CARLOAD lot of steers sold in the Chicago stockyards on Monday, for the first time on record, at $10.10 a hundred. Except in the case of prize-winning single animals, beef on the hoof has never before sold for a price as high as 10 cents a pound. That the stated price was not exceptional is proved by the fact that another sale followed at $10.05 a hundred. In both cases the record prices were due to the scarcity of choice cattle. The scarcity of choice cattle is due to a cause that has been pointed out and dwelt upon repeatedly of late by those familiar with the situation. The ranges, as everybody who has studied the question knows, have ceased to meet the demand. During the first six months of 1912 the total cattle receipts at the six principal live stock markets of the United States showed a decline of 410,000 head as compared with the same period in 1911. As an illustration of a condition that is prevalent throughout the entire cattle raising region, Omaha reports that the feeding lots in the country contiguous have fewer cattle in them than they have had at any time since they were established. The receipts of western range cattle are lower this year than they have been for some time. To keep pace with the growth of population and increased consumption the supply should be larger, not smaller.

One of the principal causes of the present extraordinarily high prices for beef is the demand for young meat. As the Omaha Bee, in discussing the matter, remarked a short time ago, consumers are not giving cattle raisers time for their work. Cattle are not produced in litters as are swine. One head of cattle cannot be made into a finished beef in twelve months. The American people are today demanding the best beef, the young beef, and to satisfy this demand the source of supply itself is being impaired. Behind all this are operating, of course, the causes of scarcity often referred to—the division and subdivision of the once great ranges, the influx of home-seekers, the fencing of watercourses, the conversion of ranges into farms. In the older sections, lands are too valuable to be thrown into extensive pastures. Then, again, there is the high price of corn and feed.

Nevertheless, it has been shown within the last few weeks, as a result of a careful survey of the situation, that there are immense tracts of unused land going to waste that might be employed for grazing cattle. There is still homestead land to be had in nearly every one of the western states. Even Nebraska, close to one of the greatest of the cattle markets, has inducements in this line to offer the settler. Manifestly, something must be done toward reducing the price of beef; the way to reduce it is to cheapen its production, and the way to cheapen its production is to increase the area of cultivation.

Nor long ago, there appeared in the Stamboul, a French paper published in Constantinople, a notable contribution from the pen of one of the editors of the Syrian daily Assalam of Buenos Aires. The writer protested against the wholly inadequate Ottoman consular service in South America where there are today over half a million subjects of the Sultan, a fact which does not seem to be understood by the Turkish authorities. Ever since the inauguration of the constitutional regime in Turkey, that is, for the last four years, the Ottoman immigrants in the Latin republics, it appears, have been carrying on an active propaganda for the appointment of a sufficient number of consuls. A beginning was made by the creation of a consulate-general in Buenos Aires, while that created in Rio de Janeiro under Abdul Hamid was ordered suppressed and the consul recalled by the Young Turks. If a full-fledged diplomatic representation was thought out of the question by the cabinet in Constantinople, the government of Brazil, in view of the steady increase of Ottoman immigration, decided recently to open a legation in the Turkish capital, as a result of which the aspirations of the Syrian settlers scattered throughout Latin America are finding expression in a renewed clamor.

This corroboration by the Brazilian government of the views expressed in the Stamboul would doubtless have its due effect were the Ottoman empire in a less critical condition and also in better financial circumstances. As Suleiman Bustani Effendi, the eminent Syrian writer and statesman, former deputy and now senator, not long ago wrote to the Syrian residents in Mexico, "both time and money have been lacking so far for the government to take into consideration your request for a consular service." Undoubtedly, while the Turks are struggling for their national existence, the interests of half a million Christian emigrants from Syria are immaterial to them, however anxious the Latin republics themselves may be for a proper protection of the interests of these oriental settlers. That they are anxious the writer of the article is certain; he quotes the minister of foreign affairs of Uruguay who assured him not long ago of the readiness of his government to open negotiations with Turkey for the establishment of a consular service and that the Uruguayan consul in Fiume had been instructed to report fully on Levantine affairs.

That the course of Syrian immigration in Latin America has not been a smooth one by any means, witness the troubles in Haiti and the decree excluding it from Colombia. But these shrewd traders have evidently found congenial surroundings in Latin America, whither the men from Andalusia took so much more of the Orient than Americans ever think of. At a time when the integrity of the Ottoman empire is undergoing a more severe test than it has had since San Stefano, the lure of the Spanish world beyond the Atlantic must seem stronger than ever to the Levantine.

Youth's Crossroads

WHITHER shall the American youth walk, vocationally considered? Until recently he has been much freer to choose for himself than are most persons of his age in other and older lands. Parents have advised but not insisted. Friends have counseled, but as amateurs not as professionals speaking with authority. Schools and colleges have allowed some leeway in choice of studies and beginnings have been made in differentiated higher education. Occasionally educational institutions have conceived it obligatory to aid students seeking for work, which, having found and profited by, they ever after have followed. But speaking in general terms the American youth has been an individualist in this matter. No formal caste distinctions based on birth, wealth or creed, as a matter of course, have determined his calling or status. He has done what he pleased, become what he pleased, risen if he pleased and fallen as he pleased.

Scrutiny of the outcome of this process has been going on of late; and some debts as well as credits have been entered on the ledger account. Men are beginning to say that here, as everywhere, liberty often has been confounded with license. Educators are insisting on reduction of choice of electives in college. Parents—facing economic stringencies of a new era and realizing the demands of a coming day on the earning capacities of founders of families—are insisting that schools should train pupils to earn a living as well as live a life. Publicists, discovering waste, misdirected effort and friction between workers and employers as the outcome of youths "drifting" into careers, are busy organizing vocational bureaus, advisory in their functions. In short society is organizing to erect more guideposts at the crossroads; and not only that—guides are to walk with the novitiates along the way.

The earlier this process of aid begins the better; for a recent poll of the students of the University of Minnesota shows that at least two thirds of those who now know what they will try to do in life after graduation decided when in high schools; and of the students of the university at least nine tenths of them are now fixed in a life purpose.

Ottomans in Latin America

THREE concrete proposals respecting reduction of cost of living by furnishing closer relations of producer and consumer of food are found in a supplementary report of a commission appointed by the Legislature of New York. The first recommendation is, that cities establish and fully equip a department of markets responsible for supervision of food vending on the economic and sanitary sides and for giving publicity as to cost of food. Here Europe points the way. Second, it is proposed that railways and steamship lines must be encouraged, and if necessary obliged, to facilitate prompt deliveries of food and on terms and by methods which give fair play to wholesalers who wish to purchase. Moreover, the common carriers, it is held, should be required to have accessible at all times figures as to the amount of food brought by them into the city each day.

Last, and by no means least, it is proposed that there must be encouragement of the system of distribution of food from producer to consumer which has been developed by the department store, since in this method, the committee finds by careful comparison with twelve other systems now used in New York, there is a minimum of waste, a maximum of satisfaction to purchasers, and a fair profit to the vender. Only by thoroughgoing and radical facing of the problem of food-distribution can one large element in the increased cost of living be settled, especially in urban centers. New York's margin of cost for the process is the difference between food that at the terminals costs $350,000,000 per year and that in kitchens of consumers costs $500,000,000. With adequate distributing centers rightly placed, and profiting by all the economies that would come from consolidation, effective site, etc., this commission estimates that New York consumers might save not less than $60,000,000 a year.

Conditions that in New York city are acute and intensified exist elsewhere in a milder form. While a variety of social agencies are to busy themselves henceforth in greatly increasing the number of producers in the United States by fostering a return to the land, others, it is plain, must get busy with this problem of bringing what the producer creates to the consumer with a minimum of cost.

People's Markets

Authors' Rewards

COMPLIANCE with certain forms of law made necessary by newer forms of taxation is making accessible today public records that reveal precisely the amount of wealth accumulated by authors as well as by bankers, contractors and business men in general. Demos is growing very inquisitive both as to size and source of incomes, and the man of letters is no more exempt than the man of affairs. Hence it has been disclosed during the past week that a well-known novelist, given to progressive views and artful in depicting what he believed to be the iniquities of the American plutocracy, left an estate, chiefly in royalties on his books, which has increased in value by more than $40,000 during the year and a half that it has been in the administrator's hands. In other words, the posthumous interest plus the natural constituency created during the writer's lifetime, can be capitalized, for a season at least, in terms exceeding incomes drawn by many business men whom the world would call highly successful. It was the fortune of one of these novels of contemporary life to bring to the author's estate $7000 a year. Another brought $5000. No difficulty has been met in selling the manuscript of an unpublished short story for more than $2000.

Undoubtedly an author today who meets contemporary demands for fiction can, by marketing his or her wares in successive markets, derive from serial, book and dramatic rights a profit in terms of money that would have amazed novelists of an earlier time. Moreover a new source of revenue is opening from the motion picture. So that now there are peculiarly strong temptations for a writer to descend to the popular taste and thereby win immediate wealth, indifferent to ultimate fame.

For a majority of writers, however, conditions have not materially altered, making it necessary for them to consider authorship as an avocation rather than a vocation; and for a minority, who cannot fall back upon craft of hand, or thought-employed in business, or inherited income, there is left that recourse which European states give in the form of pensions.

A State Hall of Fame

WHEN Francis Bacon faced the issue of ultimate justice being done him he was untroubled. "For my name and memory, I leave it to men's charitable speeches, and to foreign nations, and the next age," he said. "The men who yesterday were great hopes are tomorrow hardly recollections; the world goes on devouring in its feverish activity idols, crowns and dynasties," said Castelar, and the infrequency with which the name of this Spanish orator and republican is now mentioned illustrates the truth of his remark even as applied to democracy's treatment of its leaders.

On the other hand, it is not true that in a variety of ways the modern world is providing against that injustice which too often in the past has allowed a really great man to pass out of sight, at least for a season? The modern passion for publicity and detailed description of all persons who in any way figure as public characters unquestionably has its perverse sides. The frequent polls or plebiscites indicating those of contemporary men and women who are deemed greatest can easily be caricatured by a cynical critic of the ephemeral and popular. Publishers and editors no doubt now conspire to induce, with respect to living men, exhaustive biographies that in a former day would have been left to follow the close of their careers. Moreover, in both Great Britain and the United States of late there has been imitation of the French in setting up tribunals that elect to immortality writers some of whom, a generation or two hence, surely will be forgotten.

Yet after all is said in the way of mild scorn or savage attack on the premature and selfish quality of much of contemporary fame—which is really notoriety—it also is true that in entirely legitimate ways men are providing that human worth shall have enduring recognition; and have it, too, in forms that appeal to the eye through art's aid and imagination's ministry. Even if contemporary and ultimate judgments disagree, it is better to judge and to err than not to admire and revere at all. So that even should California, in its proposed state hall of fame, include persons who now seem significant but who in 1912 will seem petty, what of it?
